YOUNG PEOPLE'S SOCIETIES.

Topic: "Our Foolish Excuses." (Luke xiv, 15—24).

The young people's topic for to-morrow evening will be "Our Foolish Excuses," having for its basis the parable contained in Luke xiv, 15—24.

The setting of this parable is of special interest and importance. It appears that the Master had been invited to dine with a certain Pharisee, and in connection with this hospitality had performed a notable miracle. A criticism was also passed upon the conduct of certain invited guests when Christ saw how they chose out the chief seats at the table, and then his host was also instructed as to the course he should pursue in the bestowment of his hospitality. At the close of these incidents one of the invited guests exclaimed: "Blessed is he that shall eat bread in the kingdom of God." This, therefore, was the specific occasion of the utterance of the parable under consideration.

The story of the parable is a familiar one. A certain man made a great supper and invited many, and at the hour appointed sent his servants to announce that everything was ready. But strange to say, each one had some excuse for not responding. One said he had bought a piece of field and must go and inspect it. Another said he had bought five yoke of oxen, and it was necessary that he should go and test them. Another still said he had just married a wife, and therefore could not come. Thus one after another declined the invitation to the feast.

At this the parable made a short turn. The host in question was very angry, and sent out his servants quickly and invited "the poor, the maimed and the halt and the blind." Still the guest chamber was by no means filled. So he went out his servants a second time, saying: "Go out into the highways and hedges, and compel them to come in, that my house may be filled." And so ends the lesson: "For I say unto you that none of those men which were bidden shall taste of my supper."

Such is the parable, but what is its great lesson it is intended to teach? Well, it is evident that it was spoken primarily for the benefit of those present at the feast. These were immediately, if not entirely, of the Jewish faith and nation. Its chief import, therefore, was to indicate to these that the great Gospel feast had been prepared, that the invitation had been extended primarily to the Jewish people to come and partake of its bounties, but that the nation they had declined the invitation upon the most trivial grounds. Besides, they had sold their heritage for a mess of pottage, and that now the invitation would be extended to the Gentiles. Having forfeited their birthright, the servants would go out into the highways and hedges to compel the Gentiles to come in, that the house and the table might be filled. And even now the highways and hedges of sin and despair, by the restraining power of love, all they should meet to come, exclaiming with a lip in accord with the after history of the Gospel of the Kingdom.

But we believe the parable has a wider application and application than this. It certainly is intended to warn us against a repetition in Christendom of the same mistake made by the Jews. Acute and apathetic has the history of the kingdom repeated itself. How often it has proved true, even as in the days of the apostle, that "not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called; but God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise, and weak things of the world to confound the mighty, and base things of the world and things which are despised hath God chosen, and things which are not, to bring to naught things that are." And all for the great reason, "That no flesh should glory in his presence."

Coming a little closer, we find that the majority of those who are absorbed with the accumulation of this world's goods, or who are given over to the pleasures of life, are those who are busily engaged. Their excuses are of similar import as those contained in the parable. In the parable, but the real excuse is, they care nothing for the gospel or its promised blessings. They do not believe in the statement, "Seek first the kingdom of God, and all things need be added unto you." They turn away from the proclaiming of the Christ when he says: "What shall it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul? Or, what shall a man give in exchange for his soul?" Unlike the man in Pilgrim's Progress, with the "muck-rake" their eyes are turned towards the straws of earth, and they do not see the crown of life overhead.

Of course, there is a very special lesson here for those who would be instrumental in building up the Kingdom of God. They must be willing to go out in the highways and hedges to seek and to save the lost. Here they will often find the most ready response.
