THE WASHINGTON CRITIC, WASHINGTON, D. C. TUESDAY, MAY 19, 1885.

MR. VEST'S 'MORMONISM.' Senator Vest commented at some length and with considerable warmth on the Edmunds polygamy bill to a New York reporter the other day, and during his comments he made some bold thrusts at the measure now exciting the Mormons.

Under that bill, says the Senator, 'the wife may be brought into court and compelled to tell what has passed between herself and husband under the sacred cover of marriage. The bill pretends to uphold the Christian marriage of one man to one woman, but really strikes it the most dangerous blow ever known. Why, a man may be wed to one wife for thirty years and then remove to Utah and become afflicted with the polygamous craze. The woman may be opposed to it in every form, but she can, under the Edmunds bill, be forced to come into court and swear away the liberty of the partner of her youth. She is still his wife. Why, such a thing is damnable—outrageous.'

In addition to these stirring views, Senator Vest also commented on the motives actuating a few who voted for the bill. He says Senator Edmunds' only excuse was that the husband could not be convicted without the testimony of the wife. 'I told Senator Bayard,' said Mr. Vest, 'that with his views of the sacred character of the marriage relation he was doing wrong' in voting for the Edmunds bill. Senator Garland had a local excuse in the fact that the people who were murdered at Mountain Meadow came from Arkansas.

In explanation of his own vote Senator Vest actively admitted to stand up in the Senate and opposed the bill, as I would again. They called me a Mormon out in Missouri, but I went on the stump and defended my action and was sustained. Yet our people are as bitterly opposed to polygamy as the people of any other State.'

When statesmen and lawyers of such high character and integrity as Senators Vest, Bayard, Edmunds and Garland are found diametrically opposed to each other in the methods by which their common object may be obtained, who shall assume to determine the matter.

VICTOR HUGO. He loved the flowers, the birds, and the children equally, as though all that was true and beautiful on earth had other than that trinity of loveliness. He thought the angels of Heaven had tried to fashion one of their number out of these earthly materials, and had failed only because the plumage of the paradise bird did not match the golden locks of his neighbor's daughter.

The sunshine early crept into Victor Hugo's heart and stayed there. Life and light gathered in his big brown eyes and shone resplendent from his soul, giving always a benediction of happiness and peace. He loved the poor because nobly because it was an outcast. He fed the birds in the parks because they were at his mercy. He worshipped the truth because it was so scarce and so very friendly.

Whether alive or dead, Victor Hugo's monument was long since erected and unveiled in the hearts of humanity. No words of praise or censure now can crush that granite shaft of gratitude which the poor of the world have dedicated to him. He may sleep beneath the shadows of the Tuilleries, or rest serene beneath the stars that twinkle above the green fields of France, or live on for another decade with all the honors a grateful people could bestow upon him. Yet his buoyant, happy, trusting soul would go about the earth like a Pythagoras, finding good deeds to perform and kind words to say.

The world of letters, of religion and of law will be very lonesome without Victor Hugo.

It is a matter of sincere regret that the jovial and accomplished Senator Joe Blackburn has fallen out with the Administration over the small question of patronage. Senator Blackburn's friends had hoped he would think twice before taking the final step, or at least would wait till some great tangible principle had become involved.

According to Bradstreet three hundred and fifty thousand able-bodied men are out of employment in this country—a pretty good plant to begin with for the erection of a system of sea-coast defenses or most any work of national importance. It is a plant which a wise government ought to utilize.

The retirement of Chief Justice Drake from the Court of Claims bench removes into private life a gentleman who has spent his upright, learned and incorruptible judge. As for the notorious Drake Constitution of Missouri, it is better to let the grass grow over its memory.

Hand of the Garnet to a court of inquiry, in the case of Paul Boyton and his bogus torpedo, was in league with Boyton to give him a little more free advertising.

JOHN ROACH is in hard luck with his Dolphin. Before starting on the next trial trip, he should pack her journals in ice.

PEOPLE IN GENERAL. Mrs. JULIA WARD HOWE and Miss Maud Howe will return from New Orleans about June 15, and go at once to Newport for the summer.

The Hon. Robert C. Winthrop and family will spend a portion of the summer at Richfield Springs.

The Fifth-avenue residence of the late Governor Morgan was sold at auction yesterday for $400,000.

Hon. FRANK HUDS has returned to Toledo, and assures his Ohio friends that his contest for a seat in the Forty-ninth Congress promises a successful outcome.

The Yale College authorities will not release the Vice-President from his engagement to deliver an address at the coming commencement, and he will therefore postpone his Pacific trip for a few weeks.

MAJON BURKE, late director-general of the New Orleans Exposition, has sacrificed both health and fortune to the enterprise, never having drawn even a dollar of the salary voted him. On the contrary, he has made over to the creditors of the exposition all of his own and his wife's property, including the real estate, and retained only his interest in the Times-Democrat.

HENRY WARD BEECHER told his congregation Sunday that he would not be with them many more of these fast-tasting years. 'Steadily,' he said, 'for more than half a century, I have been under the influence of the great doctrine of evolution.' He will shortly communicate the results of his evolutionary experience to a stenographer and have them printed in book-form.

THE ENGAGEMENT OF MISS HEST of New York to Paymaster Michler of Washington and Miss Emily Biddle of Washington to Lieutenant Stanton of the Pensacola, are announced. All the contracting parties were at Old Point Comfort when the nuptials sailed for the Mediterranean Saturday.

HOW FRENCH WOMEN DRESS. The Good Taste that Clothes Them Cheaply and Well.

The chief point to note about the dress of a Parisian woman, no matter what her station in life may be, is its appropriateness. She does not wear as costly garments usually as the American of the same social class, but they are always thoughtfully suitable for her position and to the occasion on which they are to be worn. A French elegant, for instance, will neither go shopping in a dress, nor to a wedding, official reception in a black jacket or cashmere gown. She never goes out on foot in superb and showy apparel, or approaches a ball in a dress that made high in the neck and with long sleeves. Etiquette forbids her receiving even the most intimate of her gentlemen friends in a dress that is not in the style that has been relaxed of late in favor of the very superb morning toilets of brocade and satin and lace, which have been conceived for occasions of the kind. Parisian dressmakers, these, however, are simply reception toilets for morning instead of afternoon wear. If she desires to go to a ball, she dons the style that has been relaxed of late in favor of the very superb morning toilets of brocade and satin and lace, which have been conceived for occasions of the kind.

TRICKS IN THE NOVEL TRADE. Who Write the Stories—Business Dull in Cheap Literature.

Business was never duller with the publishers of cheap and popular novels, says a New York special to the Baltimore American, whether in book or periodical form, the sales of such literature having lately fallen off in a far greater degree than the hardness of the times would seem to justify. This seems to have wrought bad temper among the concerns which issue the market for cheap literature are numerous. This litigation relates chiefly to copyrights and trade-marks. Incidentally there is a divergence of opinion as to what constitutes a new story. The view is held that the largest sale of any are those which have 'The Duchess' for an author.

A New Yorker who was coming home from California last week had his pocket picked by a fellow passenger on a train as they came steadily along. The victim discovered his loss late to capture the thief, and when he applied to the conductor for compensation, the latter replied: 'Ah! it was the fellow with the hawkeyes.' 'How?' 'Well, he used to sell silver mice to Boston parties and, as that business is now played off in his own way, he has produced a considerable amount of money. He has a habit of looking at you as you pass, and will sell you any variety of things that may find in the wallet.'

Recreation for the Deacons. Deacon (to member of the church)—'What do you think, Mr. Smith, about giving our pastor a trip to Europe this summer for a couple of months?' Mr. Smith (doubtfully)—'Who will read the sermon?' Deacon—'No, nobody; the church will be closed.'

Mr. Smith, enthusiastically—'It's a capital idea. The old gentleman needs rest. Fat me down for what's right.'—New York Times.

The Staging Beggars. I heard two beggars sing to-day; Two beggars, clanking from the throng, Their heads bowed, and their eyes dim, Were like them as they shrank along. Such wild, fierce characters were they.

I heard two beggars sing to-day; They sang to sleep when day was done; They sang to sleep their little one, Such sweetest lullabies their ragged run As glorified the lay, I woe, Song's best revelation made to men.

According to South Washington advices, the District census would have shown a considerably larger footing if the old canal had been fenced in or filled up.

It looks a little as though the British Admiral at Halifax, in subjecting Captain
