IOWA MERCHANTS BUY IN ST. LOUIS

Efforts to Secure Trade of Hawkeye State, Formerly Held by Chicago, Successful — Better Railway Facilities.

Efforts that have been made during the last few seasons to bring Iowa merchants into the St. Louis market have met with marked success this year. According to V. O. Saunders, manager of the Interstate Merchants' Association, and local wholesale dealers, there are more buyers here now from the Hawkeye State than has ever been the case before at this time of the year.

Indications are that the number would be much larger but for the cold weather, which has delayed merchants from all parts of the territory tributary to St. Louis. Advices have been received by many of the large Washington avenue houses stating that prominent merchants of Iowa who have not dealt here before will lay their spring goods in this market.

Mr. Saunders said yesterday that he had had an opportunity to see the men from Iowa, and all who have talked to him speak in the highest terms of St. Louis as a general market. He quotes one prominent merchant as having said that this is the best center for general buys in the United States.

The keenest competition for the Iowa trade has been with Chicago. That city has corralled much of the business because in former years railroad rates were much better between Iowa points and Chicago than between the same points and St. Louis. Merchants got in the habit of going to Chicago and have continued doing so.

BETTER RAILWAY FACILITIES.

Now the railroad advantages possessed by St. Louis are quite as good as those of Chicago. It is thought that as soon as this is understood by the merchants who have for years patronized the Chicago market will come here.

Mr. Saunders said that in spite of the cold weather there is a large number of out-of-town buyers in St. Louis. Jobbers in the millinery trade are well represented in St. Louis. Yesterday the principal millinery houses in the wholesale district were kept busy with the large visitors from the Southwest and West.

Large crowds of merchants are expected during the time of the third meeting of the Interstate Merchants' Association. This begins February 21 and lasts until March 3.

Cold weather and the price of cotton in the South have to a great extent kept down the number of buyers as compared with the time last year.

TELLS OF PLOTS CONCOCTED IN BLOODY KENTUCKY FEUD

Mose Feltner Describes Secret Nightly Meetings With Judge Hargis and Others at Which He Was Induced to Agree to Murder of James B. Marcum, His Attorney, and the Man Whom He Says "He Loved as He Did His Brother"—Reward Was to Be His Freedom From Charge of Killing Jesse Fields, a Friend of the Conspirators.

GOV. BECKHAM, HE WAS TOLD, WOULD PARDON ON REQUEST.

REPUBLIC SPECIAL.

Louisville, Ky., Feb. 15.—A sensational exposition of the affairs in Breathitt County has been made in the deposition given at Winchester last week by Mose Feltner, who was one of the tools of the Hargises and others in the notorious Breathitt County feud. The story told by Feltner is remarkable in many particulars. He tells of greed, hate, treachery, perjury, murder, bribery and the debauchery of the machinery of the law to serve the ends of the men who controlled absolutely the affairs of the county.

The sensational revelation has been corroborated in a measure by the deposition of Sam Fields. Other portions have also been corroborated in many particulars, though not in detail, through the several trials growing out of the assassination in Breathitt County, and notably since the murder of James B. Marcum, which aroused the representatives of the law and set prosecution on foot.

Both Feltner and Fields were summoned as witnesses at the trial in Winchester of the damage suit of Mrs. James B. Marcum against James Hargis, Judge of Breathitt County, former State Senator Alexander Hargis, Sheriff Ed Callahan and B. F. French, leader of the noted French-Everson feud, for the murder of James B. Marcum.

Feltner and Fields fled from Winchester because they were in peril of their liberty and of being arrested for contempt of court, gave depositions which have since led to a sensation in Kentucky.

Feltner is 22 years old and a resident of Mad Dog, in Leslie County. Feltner says that on his way to Winchester to testify in the case he met Sheriff Callahan on the train. Callahan asked him if he realized his danger in testifying in the case, and Feltner says that Callahan intimated very strongly he would be killed if he did so. Later he met B. F. French, who told Feltner he was willing to help him out of his trouble for the killing of Jesse Fields in Breathitt County.

In the end Feltner was examined, but secured a new trial at the hands of the Court of Appeals and the case is still pending. Feltner says that on his promise to leave and not give testimony against the Hargises they offered him $1,500 and a guarantee that they would release him from his troubles in Breathitt County. The money was given to him, he says, by B. F. French.

PLAN FOR KILLING MARCUM.

Among the striking passages in Feltner's testimony are these:

"I think it was on the second or third day of this special May term, I had a talk with John Smith and John Abner and they asked me if I would allow them to suggest a plan to get me out of my trouble, and I told them I would. This was Smith and Abner the talking, in the presence of Abner.

"I asked them what the plan was, and Smith remarked that he was afraid to tell me just then, but would tell me later, and said it was a fine something I would not want to do, but it was a sure plan for me to get out of my trouble, and asked me if I would be willing to do most anything to get out, and I told him anything in reason of course, and he said he would talk it over with people who were high in authority, and guessed I knew who it was, and that they had sent him to see me to talk this matter over with me, and if I would listen to him he would work for them and he would help me out of my trouble. This was just after court set on the morning of the second or third day of the term, I don't remember which.

"We then separated, with the understanding that we would see each other again on the following day. In the meantime I went to Mr. Marcum, my attorney, and told him what I had been told to pay by Smith and Abner. He said to me that he had an idea what it was that they wanted done, but he did not tell me at the time what he suspected. I asked him his advice about the matter, and he advised me to see them again and find out just what it was they wanted me to do.

"The following day I had another conversation with them, and in that conversation they asked me if I would be willing to do most anything to get out of my trouble, and after further talk that if a man had kill a man, it was into trouble that he ought to be willing to kill another to get out, one of them remarked that it was not so scary to be fooling about the matter any further, and suggested to the other to tell what it was they wanted me to do.

"He then told me that they wanted me to kill that d—d fellow that was defending me, referring to J. B. Marcum. I told them that was a pretty serious matter, and I would have to think about the matter further before agreeing to do it. I told him I would give them an answer that afternoon.

"At the time we had this conversation Mr. Marcum had gone to his dinner, and as soon as he returned I had a talk with him and told him what it was they wanted me to do, that they wanted me to agree to kill him, and he said to me it would be very dangerous for me not to agree to do what they had suggested, and I had better consent to do it, and then keep him, as one of my plans or arrangements, so that he could be out of the way.

"On the same afternoon, after having this conversation with Mr. Marcum I met Smith and Abner again and told them I had thought the matter over and had made up my mind that I would do most anything to get out of trouble, and would undertake to kill Marcum.

"We then arranged to meet with Ed Callahan and James Hargis at Hargis's office, in the upstairs of their store building, which is located just across the street from the courthouse, in Jackson. We were to meet there that night after the lights had been put out in the store.

SECRET MEETING AT NIGHT.

The putting out of the lights was to be a signal that everything was ready. I was around on the streets until the lights were put out in the store, and I went to the door and John Smith opened the door and I went in and went up to the room and found James Hargis, Ed Callahan and John Abner in the room. Smith went to the room with me. They had some beer and some whisky, and we all sat around and talk for nearly an hour before anything was said to the purpose of our meeting.

"It was finally suggested by Jim Hargis that if we were there on any business, to tell what it was. John Abner then remarked that he and John Smith had talked the matter over with me, and I had agreed to do what he and Callahan wanted done. Hargis then said it was a very dangerous business we were entering upon, and that whatever was said between them was to be sacred and must be kept secret, that if I ever told anything about it I would either be killed or they would all swear it was a lie, and if I ever testified to anything that had occurred that they would send me to the Penitentiary for false swearing.

"Hargis said to me that Governor Beckham was a friend of his, that he owed his election in a large measure to him, and that he would grant a pardon to any person that he might ask him to, and save some instances where Beckham, at his request, and the request of Judge Redwine, had granted pardons without any reason being given except that they wanted it done.

"He further stated that he could have the case against me for the killing of Jesse Fields dismissed, or, if I preferred it, we would go through the form of a trial and have me acquitted by the jury, and that if I should happen to be convicted, that he would procure a pardon for me.

"They said Marcum seemed to be afraid of them, and they could not get an opportunity to kill him without doing it in the open, and that Marcum was my attorney and my friend, and they had decided that, owing to this fact, that I was the only man that could get an opportunity to kill him, and that for that reason they had selected me.

HOW MARCUM WAS TO DIE.

Q. "Were any plans suggested that night for the killing of Marcum?"

A. "No, there was no plan laid that night but they wanted me to think the matter over and try to think of a plan the next day and tell them the plans the next night. We agreed then that we would meet in Hargis's office the next night by the same signal as the night before."

Q. "Go ahead and tell about the meeting and what plans were laid."

A. "We met according to promise and we agreed upon a plan. The plan was for me to get Marcum to come down to his office to make out some affidavits in my case, but before doing this I was to go up on the mountain between the business part of town and Mr. Marcum's home upon the hill and hide a shotgun by the side of that road, and after Marcum had finished the work at the office I was to go back to where I had the shotgun hid by the side of the road with him, and when we arrived at the place where the shotgun was I was to bid Marcum good-night, pick up the shotgun and empty both barrels of it into his back."

Feltner said he had arranged for the killing of Marcum by making the excuse to get him to come downtown, and had been provided with a gun for that purpose. Feltner said he had taken the gun and hid it in his sister's room at his boarding-house. He was unable, however, to induce Marcum to come to his office, and the next morning he went up to the Hargis store and so reported.

Further along Feltner said another plan was discussed to waylay Marcum as he came out of his house and kill him. Tom White, John Abner and John Smith were all to aid him in this plan. All four had been provided with 38-caliber Winchester rifles, which were obtained from Judge Hargis's office. Feltner goes on to say:

"We went to Louis Hays's and Smith, White and myself went to bed and Abner set up in order to wake us up at the proper time to get in front of Marcum's house before daylight. He waked us up at 2:30 and we went around up the river and up Mildree branch and up the hill in front of Marcum's house. We lay there behind a log until it began to get near daylight, and we were within ten feet of the road where he would have to pass.

"When we saw it was going to get daylight and he was not coming out until day, we retreated to some trees and stayed there until it got still lighter, and we feared we might be seen there and retreated from there to a rock quarry some 200 yards from the house.

PLAN FOR MURDER FAILS.

"John Abner seemed to be very anxious about the matter in case we should shoot and miss if Marcum came out, and wanted to come nearer, and we came out under some trees near the rock quarry and nearer the house. We stayed there until we saw Ned Marcum and Mrs. Mary Johnson come out from the house. We went back from there when we saw them coming to the rock quarry. We stayed there until they got up right near us, not more than forty yards away, and we all jumped out and ran."

Several other plans were discussed for the killing of Marcum, said Feltner, but all fell through from one cause or another, but principally because Marcum, knowing he was a marked man, was extremely careful about exposing himself. It was planned, Feltner says, to kill him as he went to Indian Fields, where it was rumored he was going to take depositions on a certain day. Marcum got wind of the plot and did not go.

After it was learned that Marcum did not go to Indian Fields it was then expected that he would pass through town on his way from the Arlington Hotel back home, and on the same day Tom White was placed in the office room of Hargis Bros. shop building, which overlooks Main street, for the purpose of killing Marcum as he went to his home, if he should pass Main street.

Some time during the day he passed up Main street on the side next the Courthouse, carrying his small child in his arms and accompanied by his wife and sister and some other members of his family. White failed to shoot.

"After Marcum had passed on Jim Hargis, Ed Callahan and I went up to the room where White was, and Jim Hargis jerked the gun out of his hand and cursed him, and asked him why he did not shoot, and White told him he could not afford to shoot the child; that if they had given him a Winchester he could have shot his head off without any danger to the child, but they had given him a shotgun and he could not afford to kill the child; and Ed Callahan remarked: 'You ought to have tied its guts around his damned neck,' and Jim Hargis remarked: 'Yes, for they will all have to be killed as they grow up, anyway.'

"Were any more plans laid or any suggestions made as to how Marcum should be killed?"

"We had another meeting then that night. It was agreed they would send after French and Alexander Hargis to assist in laying a plan, as B. F. French had never failed in laying a plan to kill a man. They both came, but I refused to be in any consultation with French, as he was an enemy of mine and had prosecuted me in my case, and I didn't care to have anything to do with him, in order to make them believe I was sincere in what I was doing, by refusing to be in consultation with a man who was known to be my enemy."

AGREES TO KILL MARCUM.

Feltner told also of a conversation with Judge Hargis at his store building in Jackson with reference to the killing of James Cockrill.

"Smith and Abner invited me up to Judge Hargis's office on the second floor of his store, where they had a tub of ice cold beer. We drank a few bottles of beer and some fine whisky, which they told me that Judge Hargis kept for himself and special friends. This time Smith raised the subject and talked more freely than Abner or others did the day before.

"Smith told me that they two, with Judge Hargis and Ed Callahan, had held a consultation in that office the night before, and had decided that I was worthy of trust. That I had stood in like a man, that I had killed their friend, Jesse Fields, in self-defense, and ought to be free, and that they were going to give me an opportunity to prove myself a hero, and thereby have my case dismissed, whereupon I agreed."

"Now," interfered Abner, "before you go any further, are you willing to do anything to be free? Just think of that—old pen," says he. "I would kill my grandsire to shun it. If you can kill a man to get in, you will surely kill another to get out, can't you?"

"Most assuredly," was my reply.

"And it matters not who?" says Abner.

"Not a d—n," says I.

"Then we want you to kill that——, that is, if you want us to defend you. He has got to be killed, and you are the man picked to do it, and Judge Hargis says he will have Redwine to dismiss your case as soon as it is called."

"I promised, took a bottle of beer, and agreed to meet Judge Hargis, Ed Callahan, John Smith and John Abner in the same office that night to decide upon a plan to assassinate my attorney, J. B. Marcum, a man that I loved as I do my mother; the man that spent $50 of his own money to deliver me from prison, where those very men had greatly aided in landing me."

TELLS OF HOCH'S ST. LOUIS WEDDING

Henry Schwanzala Describes Death of Mrs. Marie Becker—Says Physician Expressed Suspicion of Arsenic Poisoning.

Chicago, Feb. 15.—Mrs. Elsie Brucker of Chicago to-day created a scene at the inquest of Mrs. Marie Walcker-Hoch by exclaiming, "That's him! That's him!" and pointing her finger at Hoch.

She identified Hoch as a man who had swindled her out of $45 two years ago on a pretense of selling her a farm in Michigan. Hoch smiled at the woman sarcastically. In contrast to his nervousness at the opening of the inquest last week, Hoch to-day presented a neat appearance and wore a self-reliant air.

EXPERT EVIDENCE DELAYED.

When the hearing was resumed after the interruption, Coroner Hoffman announced that the expert medical testimony would not be presented until next Monday, when all the evidence regarding the analysis of the woman's stomach in connection with the theory of poisoning will be submitted.

Police Inspector Shippy was a witness to-day. He told in detail statements made by Hoch in the presence of witnesses after being brought here from New York. According to Inspector Shippy, Hoch admitted marrying eleven times. Five of the wives died within a year after marriage.

Inspector Shippy said that he had a long written statement signed by Hoch, which would be turned over to the State Attorney, to be used in prosecuting the defendant.

THE ST. LOUIS MARRIAGE.

Henry Schwanzala identified Hoch as a man who under the name of "John Schulz" had married Mrs. Marie Becker in St. Louis in 1903. Mrs. Becker was the mother-in-law of Schwanzala. Not long after the marriage, the witness stated, his mother-in-law was taken ill and died.

"Charles Reinhardt, a brother-in-law, told me that the doctor who attended my mother-in-law said that her death looked suspicious, and that in his opinion she died of arsenic poisoning.

"My brother-in-law and myself believed that Hoch was a decent man and had no idea that our mother-in-law had been poisoned. Chronic nephritis was given as the cause of death at the Coroner's inquest.

"After my mother-in-law's death, Hoch said that he intended to rent a flat and stay in St. Louis. He presented my wife with the wedding rings of her mother.

"Two days later I received a letter stating that Hoch had left St. Louis without paying the doctor's bill or funeral expenses."

WATER DAMAGES BANK'S PAPERS

City Employes Unable to Find Source of Leak That Has Flooded Commerce Building.

Workmen from the Water Department are mystified by a flow of water from a wall on the National Bank of Commerce building that has flooded the basement and damaged papers stored there.

The leak was discovered at 10 o'clock yesterday morning. The water was coming in a stream from the masonry and had flowed much coked into the basement before it was found.

The bank officials refused to estimate the damage that had been done to the papers. It is believed that a frozen pipe burst, allowing the water to flow. The Water Department employes, after working all day, were unable to find the source of the leak.

KILLING IN SELF-DEFENSE.

Coroner's Jury Exonerates John Miller of Shooting in Hop Alley.

The Coroner's jury yesterday decided that John Miller, who shot and killed Eugene Carrerre in a hop joint in the rear of No. 70 Market street Monday night, acted in self-defense.

Miller said that Carrerre attacked him with a poker while they were in the Chinaman's place. He said they had quarreled before over a dice game, the dispute arising over a nickel.

Policeman Ulrich took Miller back to the Four Courts after the inquest and he will be held until Assistant Prosecuting Attorney Dalton receives the transcript of evidence and has passed on the case.
