SOCIETY TO GREET SPRING DEBUTANTES

Prominent Girls Are to Come into Limelight After Easter—Jolly Parties at Woman's Club.

All articles intended for publication in The Republic society columns must be signed by the name of the writer, or they will not be published. The signature is not for print, but as an evidence of good faith. This applies particularly to engagement items.

"Next year promises to bring some really stunning society girls into the limelight. Some of them are already preparing to spread their wings and to enter into the summer campaign with zest in order to wear off that feeling of newness.

One of the prettiest of these young girls is Miss Anna Lou Caldwell, daughter of Mrs. Byrd Caldwell, and a Hosmer Hall senior, to finish her studies this June. Miss Caldwell, who is very blond, very animated and interesting, as well as endowed with rather more than her fair share of good looks, has made some infrequent social appearances this last winter, mainly at small dancing clubs, where she has usually been chaperoned by her cousin, Mrs. George Willard Teasdale. As soon as commencement is over she will go abroad with Mrs. Caldwell and their young cousin, Miss Mabel Bieler, for a tour of the Continent during the summer months. After replenishing their wardrobes in Paris and Vienna, the girls will return ready for the season. Miss Bieler, however, has been out for a winter or two.

Of course, it doesn't chance to be quite the right season for oysters, but we can still eat them for a month yet, and at all events, you may cut out this paragraph and preserve it in your cook book until the snow flies.

Miss Mary Means got back from a long visit to her old home in Mobile the other day, bringing both hands full of the biggest oyster shells that I ever saw outside an old-fashioned fernery. She tells me that they are to be used to serve small Mobile oysters in, and that the way it is done is something like this: First, catch your little oysters, and, by the by, we don't get many of those small, succulent and deliciously flavored bivalves up here. They are far and away better than the alleged Blue Point, which Mr. Henry C. Lewis was kind enough to tell me once isn't a Blue Point at all. He says the genuine Blue Point oyster comes from a tiny cove somewhere on Long Island Sound, and the cove is so very small that its output wouldn't begin to supply even one of the big New York hotels, let alone ever getting these oysters shipped out West. So that most of the East, and surely all of the West, get a small oyster, somewhat like the Blue Point in shape and size, but by no means the real thing."

To resume: These little Mobile oysters are first broiled, then packed into the shells of the great big oysters, known as "plant" oysters, with a piece of butter put into the bottom, and then the specially prepared sauce which is rather hot as to seasoning, with a dash or two of tabasco, some highly flavored catsup, etc., but not quite such high seasoning as the cold oyster requires in a cocktail, for instance. Then, on top of this sauce and butter go the little broiled oysters, and next a piece of toast to keep the whole thing warm. And then you sit down and eat. Doesn't it sound good?

"Have you seen the plus magnolia trees in full bloom in the William K. Bixby gardens? There are four or five trees that covered with blossoms, large and full petaled, and filling the spring air with their heavy fragrance. The white magnolias, too, are out in Shaw's garden and Tower Grove Park. They all bloom long before the leaves come, like the American red bud and the commoner fruit trees—plum, peach and pear.

"Speaking of things floreacent reminds me that there is a new rose, and a beauty it is, too. Mr. Weber showed it to me one day last week—a good-sized pink bloom, the pink rich and creamy, and the rose very tightly folded as to its petals. It is called the Madame Cousine, and is more delicately perfumed than any other tea rose that grows.

Clarence McNair Hesenfritz, Miss Edwina Tutt and Mr. Charles Allen Cale are to combine in giving a concert very soon—the 27th is the date—at Beethoven Conservatory Hall. It will be an afternoon concert, and no doubt fully as fashionable as all of Mr. Hesenfritz's recent affairs.

Mrs. Thomas O'Reilly, recently returned from Washington and an Eastern visit of several weeks, gave one of the jolly supper parties at the Woman's Club on Thursday night, following the Morning Choral Club concert.

On Friday evening Mr. and Mrs. Daniel M. Houser, Mr. and Mrs. John E. Thomson and several other friends were guests of Mrs. O'Reilly at dinner, followed by a theater party, to hear Schumann-Heink. On Monday afternoon Mrs. O'Reilly will entertain with a small whist party at her Washington avenue residence in honor of Mrs. John E. Thomson.

Some recently returned travelers who are delighting their friends are Mrs. Reed and her daughter, Miss Lizzie Reed. They have been away from St. Louis almost four years, spending the time in extensive travel. Miss Reed is now from California, while Mrs. Reed, who came East from the Pacific Coast earlier in the spring, is back from Hot Springs. They have reopened their former residence in West Morgan street and will remain probably through the summer.

Miss Florence Streett and Miss Edna Ramsey, both Morning Choral members, appeared at the concert last week in such very becoming new white frocks that they were immediately surrounded and complimented by the other choralists. Miss Ramsey's is of sheer white batiste, with a rather old-fashioned effect in the surplice waist, on which is much hand embroidery of the English pattern. Miss Streett's gown is of white French muslin, with many tucks and some openwork embroidery.

Mrs. William C. Little and Miss Louise Little returned last Thursday morning from their California trip of two months. Alden Hall will be opened in a few days, as Mr. Little and her younger daughter, Miss Margaret, who is an admirable housekeeper, have put everything in readiness for the arrivals.

Miss Florence Hill gave one of the very few entertainments of the past week—a delightful little informal luncheon to a small party of girl friends on Friday afternoon. Mrs. Eaton, Mrs. Dan Hill, Mrs. Tod Cooper were some of the guests and the table was a vision of beauty in pink sweet pease and mignonette.

The hatpin, injudiciously adjusted, may yet become a menace to civilization.

This statement is not meant to sound epigrammatic, but to convey a warning. Dear ladies, who are pinning on your "dreams" and "creations" and "loves of bonnets," to-day before you start for church or the Grand avenue promenade, kindly bury the point of your bejeweled hatpin somewhere out of reach in the straw or the roses, else you may hurt somebody.

All this preamble is apropos a male person, who met one of these hatpins yesterday. The hatpin sat in front of him in the street car. It projected about four inches on one side of the hat—on the side next the aisle, too. When the man, who was reading a paper and suddenly discovered that he was being carried beyond his destination, jumped to his feet and started for the door with a grand hurry-up, he encountered that hatpin just below one eye, so close to the eye in fact that a half-inch more would have ruined the sight for life, in all human probability.

As it was, when I beheld his manly countenance he had a deep and vicious scratch extending in a southeasterly direction from said eye to his jawbone. He was a sight, and he said it hurt. He told the above story in much more heartfelt—perhaps I should say scratch-felt—tones than I've done, too.

From hatpins to hats is a natural gravitation. I don't see how any woman with half an eye in her head can keep from going into raptures this spring over the hats. They were never so beautiful—nor have they ever cost so much.

The flowers are a perfect delight. Such clever imitations and so many new colors and combinations! Mrs. D. R. Francis has a flower cluster on the back of a black crin hat that has never been equaled, to my notion. It is a French hat, of course, but the flowers which droop all the way down the back are palest pink roses of the old-fashioned blush rose variety, combined with a flower that I've never before seen imitated—the deep blue ageratum which so often borders our geranium beds in the summer time.

Mrs. Adiel S. Dodge wore a confection in lilacs to her card club one day last week that roused strong feelings of envy in the soul of every woman who saw it resting on her lovely snow-white hair. The lilacs were the only trimming and they were in all the new cathedral shades, ranging from pink lilac through the lavenders. They blended perfectly.

The hat was what they called a "polo" effect, with rather high crown and very smart, made of white crin and quite transparent. Some soft knots of louisiene in the same lilac tints were put in where they looked well.

For genuine springlike beauty and all-around becomingness, Mrs. Dodge's hat is one of the most successful that I've seen.

The globe-trotters are beginning to think of starting Mr. and Mrs. Edward Randall Hoyt, back from London only about a month, are going round the world, leaving St. Louis early in May, and taking the trip very leisurely. Mrs. Frank O'Falon goes abroad this spring, taking with her Miss Mabel Wood and making Naples their first stop.
