NOTED PHYSICIAN SAYS WASHINGTON PACE KILLS.

Official Life Often Quick Route to Grave, Affirms Doctor T. C. MacDonald.

REPUBLIC SPECIAL.

Washington, July 8.—Doctor T. C. MacDonald, one of the best known physicians, who has a worldwide acquaintance with public men, in discussing the death of Secretary Hay said: "Public men here suffer from the aggravated disadvantages of a sedentary life with its well-known dietetic errors." He quoted a remark of Senator Dolliver on the death of Thomas B. Reed, as follows:

"Official life in Washington with its social side features is a bottled for Bright's disease and early grave."

Doctor MacDonald added:

"Some time ago a cabinet officer said to me: 'A good digestion and modern statesmanship should go together in the order named.'

"Few understand the multiplicity and variety of the manifestations of nephritis. So many structures remote from the original disease are involved that it last illustrates the truth of the statement that a man seldom dies from the disease with which he is afflicted. When the report goes out that a great man has Bright's disease there is often much confusion in the lay mind, because of the prominence of one or more manifestations which are only secondary.

"The case of Senator Cushman K. Davis of Minnesota, as long chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, was noteworthy. He suffered from arterial degeneration, which frequently is an accompaniment of nephritis.

"James G. Blaine was another example. While Secretary of State under President Harrison, and while feebly endeavoring to discuss some question of importance, he would lapse into unconsciousness, with eyes wide open and staring. You will remember at this time he was being pushed for the presidential nomination.

"A few evenings prior to the accident which preceded his death Lord Herschel made a delightfully witty speech at an annual dinner of the Gridiron Club. A little later he fell, breaking his thigh, and when visited at his hotel the evidence of nephritis was only too plain in the dropsy of both ankles. In a few days he was dead.

"Thomas B. Reed's fatal illness of nephritis was ushered in by an acute attack of appendicitis.

"A member of Reed's family told me that after one of those stormy scenes in his first speakership, which he apparently ruled with sphinxlike immobility, he would go home and to bed prostrated with a nervous chill.

"At the Gridiron dinner made famous by being the last that Marcus A. Hanna attended I said something to him about the worries and duties necessarily associated with public life. Pagged and worn and showing the stress and strain which he had undergone, his white, wavy face became prophetically solemn as he exclaimed:

"'Doctor, official life in Washington is nothing short of political vivisection.'"

The Book of St. Louisans.

The Republic has in course of preparation a reference book which it is believed will be of great interest to the people of St. Louis, as it pertains wholly to the people of this city. It will contain a brief, concise, correct encyclopaedic sketch of every man in St. Louis and vicinity who has gained a distinctly creditable place in commercial, industrial, professional, intellectual or social life.

It will be modeled on the plan of "Who's Who in America," a world-famous publication, recognized as the highest authority on personal data pertaining to nationally notable living Americans. It will follow the same lines of carefulness and discrimination, but will be entirely confined to pertinent data about the living men of St. Louis and vicinity who are entitled to be included in a work of this character.

Each individual paragraph will be a permanent, authoritative record adapted for ready reference, and in such manner as to often prevent newspaper errors, misspelled names and confusion of personalities. These sketches will partake in no sense of puffs, eulogies or paid write-ups. Not one line of paid matter will be permitted in the book.

Each paragraph will be a plain, simple statement of facts, devoid of objectionable features of every sort, and comprising only information that may at any moment become the subject of legitimate interest and inquiry.

The immense usefulness and importance of a reference work of this kind will be apparent to every person of ordinary intelligence and education.

MILLIONS SPENT BY GOLF DEVOTEES

Three Thousand Clubs Pay Out $50,000,000 a Year on the "Royal and Ancient Game"—High Tide of Expenditure Not Yet Reached.

It will surprise even golf devotees to know that the sum of $50,000,000 a year is spent annually on the game. Without question it is the most expensive game civilization ever took to its heart and pocket, and there is no visible evidence that the high tide of expenditure has yet been reached.

The great popularity that "the royal and ancient game," as it is termed, has attained in the last few years is not comprehended by those who are not its followers. The fact that it is played more or less out of the sight of the crowds has kept its extensiveness something of a secret. An English enthusiast, however, has gone to the pains to investigate the matter, and finds that as much money is spent on it each year as it cost to build the New York subway. In England alone nearly a third of this total sum is expended, and in Scotland a fifth.

A census taken last year showed that there were 579 golf clubs in England and 769 in this country, which comes second on the list. In Scotland there are 652, in Ireland 134, and in Wales 13, while there are 63 on the Continent.

There is not a British colony or settlement without at least one, and in many cases several, and the advance of the game has led to the formation of new clubs in almost every foreign country, Japan being among the latest recruits. Thus it comes about that there are in round figures about 3,000 golf clubs in existence throughout the world.

It has been estimated that on the average not less than a capital of $5,000 each has been sunk in the formation of these clubs and the preparation of their courses, so that there has been a total permanent investment of about $15,000,000. Few of these clubs cost less than $1,000 a year to run; many of them cost ten times as much. The revenue is not wholly or in many cases even largely, derived from subscriptions. Profits on catering and refreshments, green fees paid by visitors who are not members but who desire to play over the links, and various other items combine to swell the clubs' revenue accounts and make them equal to the heavy strain upon them.

THREE THOUSAND CLUBS.

Taking the average, these 3,000 golf clubs of the world cost about $20,000 each a year to run, which means a total of $60,000,000 per annum. Reckoning the big clubs with the little ones, the average membership is about 200, and the average subscription being $30, the total amount paid in subscriptions by the 600,000 members of the 3,000 golf clubs of the world is nearly $20,000,000.

But besides these 600,000 golfers who are affiliated with the big clubs there are, it is estimated, many thousands of unattached, so that the total golfing population of the world is about 750,000, exclusive of professionals, caddies and others who are intimately concerned. A short calculation will show that, what with club subscriptions, extra green fees, periodical purchases of clubs and balls, and the hundred other expenses of the player, prominent among which are railroad fares from residence to links, it is inevitable that the average golfer must spend at the very least $50 a year on the game. There are many enthusiasts who spend that much every month on it, and there is one well-known amateur who, having kept an account for one year, declared that his golfing expenditure, one way and another, had reached the alarming figure of $3,000, this including heavy traveling expenses. But at the most, least and alone certainly underestimated average of $50 a year, three-quarters of a million of golf players are seen to spend among them every year the colossal sum of $37,500,000.

Each of them, moreover, is possessed of an outfit which has cost him on an average $50. The clubs vary in price, and though a scratch player may play a perfect game with seven of them—and few players need more—the majority are possessed of at least twelve, the remainder being the results of experiments, discarded favorites, and so on forth. Thus the living golfing public has sunk a trifle of $15,000,000 in the purchase of clubs.

Very much more than this modest $50 has been spent upon their collection by some famous amateurs who are blessed with private means for the gratification of the desire for the purchase of new clubs for experimental purposes which, from time to time, consumes every golfer. One such amateur, when beginning a game with a friend, who was a comparative novice, inquired the cost of the twelve clubs which his caddie was carrying for him.

SET COST HIM $700.

"They are priceless," he said. "Because I could not replace them to my own satisfaction. Actually they have cost me $700."

What he meant was that he had had to spend, in the course of many years, that sum before finally getting a set to his complete satisfaction, for there was not one of the favorite twelve that cost more than $2 when bought from the makers.

The manufacture of the little white golf balls has now grown to be a very large industry, both in this country and in England. A few years ago, when the comparatively cheap gutta-percha ball held sway, it formed an insignificant portion of a player's expenditure. But the new ball, with a core of India rubber strands wound tightly round each other under tension, and which is now universal owing to its superior carrying properties and its pleasanter touch to the club, has made a great difference.

The ball is very easily damaged and made unfit for further play, and comparatively few of them are used for more than three or four games, some not more than one. They vary in price from 25 to 50 cents. It is estimated that the average spends not less than 75 cents a week on golf balls alone. Many players spend more than $5, but putting the average at $1 a week it will be seen that something like $50,000,000 a year is spent on golf balls throughout the world. It seems almost impossible that the figures prove it.

Many of these balls while new are still perfect, state, are lost in long grass, gorse, hedges and other parts of the links, and it has been calculated that on a first-class links there is at least $25 worth lost during every busy day's play. Such are some of the huge figures in golf expenditure, which are, each and all, increasing year by year.

SUBMARINE'S CREW FOUND TO BE DEAD

Occupants of Torpedo Craft, Although Alive When Boat Is First Raised to Surface, Succumb to Second Submersion.

SPECIAL BY CABLE TO THE REPUBLIC.

Paris, July 8.—The efforts made to save the thirteen men on board the French submarine torpedo boat Farfadet, which foundered on Thursday at the entrance to the port of Sidi Abdullah, Tunis, have been in vain.

A telegram says that the boat was raised today and it was found that all the crew had perished.

The Farfadet was raised above the surface of the water at noon yesterday long enough to ascertain that the occupants were alive, and fresh air was pumped into the vessel.

A start was made to remove the vessel slowly into shallow water, when at 12:19 o'clock the derrick on the salvage pontoon Kebir gave way and the Farfadet sank again, remaining, however, completely suspended by the Kebir's ladder.

The full crew of the Farfadet consisted of fourteen men and Ensign Roby, under the command of Lieutenant Rotier. Rotier and two of the sailors managed to get off of the submarine and reach the surface as she sank in the water.

The three men were on deck at the time and thus were able to save themselves, although their danger was great owing to the suction caused by the rapidly sinking vessel.

As he saw his vessel beginning to plunge to the bottom, Lieutenant Rotier made an attempt to close the manhole and thus save the crew from drowning. He did not succeed, however, and water rushed into the forward compartment with tremendous force.

The thirteen men in the interior of the boat were in the stern of the submarine and were able, it is thought, to shut the door separating their section from the forward compartment.

The submarine is of the very latest type of her class. She is propelled by electricity, has four torpedo tubes and is 125 feet long, with a displacement of 202 tons.

KAW AND MISSOURI RIVERS APPROACH THE DANGER LINE.

Both Are Rising at Kansas City, but Government Forecasts No Damage of Consequence.

REPUBLIC SPECIAL.

Kansas City, Mo., July 8.—The Kaw River and the Missouri River are again approaching the danger lines here. The tributaries of the Kaw River in Kansas are running banks full, and some have overflowed, inundating lowlands.

These conditions will raise the stage of the river at this point. The Missouri is also showing the effect of heavy rains in its watershed.

The Weather Bureau bulletin to-day says:

"The Kaw River will continue a slow rise for several days from Manhattan eastward. The Missouri will reach the danger line at St. Joseph by Sunday morning and at Kansas City Sunday night or Monday morning. It is not probable that damage of any consequence will be caused in this section."

REPUBLICAN RIVER RAGING.

REPUBLIC SPECIAL.

Junction City, Kas., July 8.—The flood situation here this morning is more serious than at the time of the high water last year. Last night the Republican River rose nearly two feet. The Smoky Hill River rose eight inches. The flood in the Smoky Hill measures more than fifteen feet, and that in the Republican more than twelve feet.

The Republican is out of its banks all along its course in this county and has inundated many hundred acres. It is within three feet of being as high as it was in 1903.

Fire in Illinois Arsenal.

REPUBLIC SPECIAL.

Springfield, Ill., July 8.—Fire early this morning in the new State Arsenal and Armory did damage to the extent of several hundred dollars. The origin of the blaze is a mystery. The flames started in the basement and much of the floor will have to be replaced. Several hundred military uniforms were also destroyed.
