COTTON AT LOWEST POINT SINCE REPORT WAS ISSUED.

Market Closes Weak at Net Decline of Nineteen to Twenty-five Points for Day.

New York, Sept. 11.—The cotton market was generally weak and unsettled with prices touching the lowest point reached since the September bureau report on all positions later than October.

The close was at just about the lowest of the session, with a net decline of 19@23 points. Sales estimated 320,000 bales.

The opening was weak, 7@13 points lower, in response to lower cables than due on the American showing of Saturday. There was covering at the initial decline, but good weather in the South, tremendous receipts and reports of free spot offerings promoted liquidations and fresh selling for short account, which was also encouraged by the absence of support from the October bull clique.

After declining to a net loss of 17@19 points the market rallied 5 to 6 points on covering, but showed little improvement in tone, and weakened again in the afternoon, with trading toward the close the most active of the session, and prices reached a new level for the day.

The closing tone was barely steady. Southern spot markets unchanged to ⅛c lower, with only small sales reported.

Private reports concerning the spot situation were somewhat conflicting, but on the whole indicated liberal offerings, and part of the selling here was said to be against actual supplies.

INADEQUATE COTTON DEMAND.

New Orleans, La., Sept. 11.—In its summary of the cotton situation, the Times-Democrat will say, to-morrow:

"Yesterday's cotton market felt the weight of the growing movement, and the effect of inadequate demand for the actual stuff at stable prices. Thus encouraged, the bears promptly advanced the suggestion that, while the new crop may not be actually improving in condition, it is improving by comparison with other crop years and may soon reach a percentage relatively good during the late maturing season, which, even after the unfavorable beginning, may produce considerably more than what would be considered a famine yield.

"As against this, the bulls found the reduced yield of lint to seed cotton an effective argument, but neither the talent nor the outsider cared to carry the increasing load of hedge sales in exchange for the privilege of speculating in 'long' cotton and a decline of 16 points on the October option was the very natural result.

"Yellow fever quarantine as a bearish influence came in for increased attention. Many interior towns are now bottled up tight, and will not admit a cotton buyer, though he come direct from the North Pole. Freight traffic with many points is prohibited, though the United States Government surgeons have declared freight cannot carry yellow fever infection.

"Just now some of the Mississippi cotton mills, which depended upon labor imported from New England, are suffering either because that labor will not come or because it cannot get through the shotgun quarantine lines.

"While the trend of yesterday's events does not represent failure of the farmers' maximum efforts, at the very least, it is clearly indicative of lack of sympathetic endeavor for the success of the farmers' programme, which, in the last analysis, is a matter of no small consequence. Yet there are many men who, remembering the producers successfully bulled a crop of nearly 14,000,000 bales, cannot figure out the difficulties now ahead of the farmer with a smaller crop to bull.

"The course of the spot market would seem to indicate that the producers, broadly speaking, are divided into three classes. Those of the first class are
