BALLOONING RAGE GENERAL IN FRANCE

Aero Club's Great Contest Causes Jubilation Among Members—Not So Dangerous as Automobiling, It Is Claimed.

SPECIAL BY CABLE.

Paris, Oct. 21.—Copyright, 1905.—With the Aero Club's great contest on Sunday and M. Lebaudy's new ascent at Toulon Thursday, ballooning has loomed large in the public eye this week.

Aeronauts are rightly jubilant over the race for the Grand Prix. It was not only an unmalleted success with respect to the competitors, freedom from accidents, length of journeys accomplished and widespread interest taken in the competition by the public, but it further justifies most optimistic predictions for the future of this fascinating sport.

As Comte Henri de la Vaulx pointed out, the long list of competitors, all aeronauts for pure love of the sport, proves that ballooning has been finally taken out of the hands of self-dubbed professors at country fairs and is entering seriously into every-day life.

For this satisfactory result is due to the enthusiasm of sportsmen as de la Vaulx himself, the Marquis de Dion, M. Santos-Dumont, the Comte de Castillon de Saint Victor, M. Jacques Faure, winner of last Sunday's contest, and other active members of the Aero Club, veritable missionaries of ballooning.

Thanks to their enlightened efforts, aviation has developed more in ten years than in the preceding century, so the Comte de la Vaulx is able now to declare that ballooning is not so dangerous as automobiling.

M. Lebaudy's airship on Thursday accomplished a six-mile circuit and returned to its starting place two and a half hours later. The passengers included General Gerard, Major Maclé, Captain Avery, General Bajodon, Governor of Toul, M. Quinnez, the pilot, and M. Henri Juillot, the designer.

Their recommendations extended to Fort Frouxy and Lahlanche. The aeronauts experienced no difficulty in finding their landings, and landing over a fort, the village in distance impossible, which struck almost never aimed at.

Jean Richard's desire to make a balloon ascent is to be gratified. The Comte de la Vaulx is preparing a ride which will probably start from the St. Cloud Velodrome next week.

"CONSUELO RIBBON" IS LATEST FAD IN NECKWEAR

REPUBLIC SPECIAL.

New York, Oct. 21.—The visit of the Duchess of Marlborough to this country has resulted in a new fashion, and the "Consuelo Ribbon" has been named for her. The "Consuelo Ribbon" is a distinct novelty, and has been added to the new costumes in a Fifth avenue shop. The ribbon is a narrow satin band that clasps the neck near the top of the collar. As a rule the collar is determined by the shape of the gown, but many "Consuelo Ribbons" are seen in gold and silver lamé.

The Duchess has a long slender neck, so for her the ribbon band is a necessity. The ribbons can be adjusted, and so there is no reason why women who do not patronize Fifth avenue shops cannot share in the fashion.

A "lullaby concert" under the auspices of and for the benefit of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor will be given next Thursday evening in the chapel of Second Baptist Church, Beaumont and Locust streets.

The following artists will appear in the programme: Mrs. H. S. Sanderson of New York, soprano; Miss Sallie Black, contralto; George Sheffield, tenor; William M. Porteous, baritone; Charles Allen Cale, violinist.

In addition to these the Bleuel Male Quartet, consisting of O. W. Ebert, D. McKay, J. H. Yore and C. A. Finley, will render several selections, while Miss Carrie Auth and Miss Natalie McIntyre will recite. Arthur Lieber will be the accompanist.

Jean Gerardy, the Belgian violoncellist, who will be the star attraction at the inaugural concert of the Choral-Symphony season in the Odeon November 7, is considered one of the most interesting as well as remarkable figures in the world of music to-day. He is but 26 years old, and like many of his type, has inherited rather than acquired his ability on the instrument.

At the age of 7 he entered the conservatory in his native city of Liege, and six months later captured the second prize in competition with young men nearly three times his own age.

It was at a mere boy of 11 years that he went forth as the youngest graduate the conservatory had ever made, and began his career as a concert violoncellist, and in less than a year later France and Spain heard him with such admiration that he was acclaimed the most wonderful genius in cellos of his time.

Upon his first appearance in London at the Crystal Palace Pade-rewski, desiring to show his high appreciation of Gerardy's genius, played his piano accompaniment.

He then went to Germany, appearing in Berlin with Hans von Bulow, and in the leading cities with the Philharmonic societies. As the first prodigy who ever performed on the violoncello he made a phenomenal success. In Vienna he appeared with Richter, and the Philharmonic Society there awarded him a diploma.

After tours in Italy, Germany, Russia and England, he was engaged for an American season, where his European successes were repeated. Since then he has visited all the great capitals of Europe, America, and Australasia.

Gerardy's career is considered the most remarkable one ever experienced by a musical artist of his years. At an age of 26 he is recognized as the foremost violoncellist in the world, and he has played engagements with only the greatest musical societies and orchestras in the countries he has visited, an honor never yet extended to one of his youth. He plays one of the best-known instruments made by Stradavarius, purchased at a great cost of £2,000 from George Hart, the celebrated London dealer.

Emilie Schoenfield, the new leading soubrette of the German stock company, has, besides the soubrettish qualities of acting and personality, an exceedingly well-trained, clear soprano, which is sympathetic to all who hear her. In to-night's performance of "Die Wilde Katze" (The Wild Cat) she will have the title role. Besides the music with which the farce is equipped, Miss Schoenfield will sing two new songs, interpolations of her own.

Hans Kissling, the tenor of the stock company, is another good acquisition for the German stock, which will enable the managers to give the most pretentious of farces and light operettas. Kissling sang here in St. Louis with Damrosch. One of the parts he sustained was that of Mime in "Siegfried." He has a high, flexible tenor of great carrying power. He will sing the part of "Rundre" to-night.

Mrs. C. P. Thomas, who as Miss Nell Wilson was well known in St. Louis because of her frequent appearance in public at various charity and church concerts, is now located in New York, where she will resume her vocal studies under some of the best teachers of the metropolis with a view of eventually entering grand opera.

She has become a member of several of the leading choral societies of New York and is also doing recital work at various church functions in neighboring cities. Several of the Eastern critics have written favorably concerning her voice.

The recital given last Wednesday by students of Wellner Conservatory was well attended and gave evidence of proficiency on the part of those who participated. Another recital will be given next Wednesday in the conservatory auditorium at 8 p. m.

E. R. Kroeger will give a piano recital at Forest Park University Monday night, October 23. The following composers will be represented on the programme: Beethoven, Mendelssohn, Schumann, Schubert, Chopin, Rubinstein, Tschaikowsky, Rachmaninoff and Kroeger.

Miss Cora Fish and class will give a recital in Benneman Hall on the afternoon of November 4.

GO YACHTING ABOVE THE SEA

Grand Lake Club and Its Watery Home in Colorado Is a Mile and Three Fifths Higher Than the Pacific.

REPUBLIC SPECIAL.

Denver, Oct. 21.—Did you ever hear of anybody yachting in an arid State a mile and three-fifths above the level of the sea?

Colorado is one of those arid States in which the Government is spending millions of dollars for water to irrigate the soil thousands of miles from the sea, where yachting is usually supposed to produce their largest crops. Yet, notwithstanding these handicaps, Colorado has a yacht club with characteristics unlike those of any other yacht club on earth. One of these is that its home is on a lake two miles long, a mile wide, half a mile deep and a mile and three-fifths high.

The Grand Lake Yacht Club of Grand Lake, Middle Park, Colo., is at home on Grand Lake, a hundred miles northwest of Denver, from which it is reached by forty miles of railroad and sixty miles by team. Denver is a mile above the sea level, and the lake is three-fifths of a mile above Denver. Possibly these are not the exact measurements in feet and inches, but the generous Coloradan, in speaking of altitudes in his State, doesn't economize on feet and inches, but counts by miles and fractions. The lake is two miles long and a mile wide, with waters as clear as crystal and nearly ice cold. Lying in a cleft of the mountains, its depths have never been sounded below the half-mile level. It is asserted by some that the lake at its deepest point is so near the other place that the waters at the bottom are warm, but this statement lacks corroboration. The trouting is fine and the bathing good.

THE TOM TOM'S ADVENT.

For a number of years Grand Lake has been the summer resort of a lot of enthusiasts. Boating has always been popular, but the yacht did not appear until about five years ago. At that time R. C. Campbell of Denver imported a rowboat from Racine, Wis., with a sail attachment, and forthwith challenged anything and everything of local manufacture that could raise a ring to the wind. This vessel was called the Tom Tom, not because it was the ordinary tomtom that anybody can beat with a stick, but in honor of Mr. Campbell's father-in-law, United States Senator Tom Patterson of Colorado, and of the Senator's grandson, Thomas Patterson Campbell. The Tom Tom walloped everything on the waters. In consequence Captain Campbell became haughty and imperious, and W. H. Bryant of Denver determined to take a fall out of him. So he produced the Dorothy from Middle Park timber and talent. She was a fine boat, with a leg of Colorado motion sail, and the Grand Lakers thought she would beat the Badger boat by splinters. The race was over a six-mile course, criss-crossed to get the distance, and Sir Thomas Lipton would have sent his sympathies to Mr. Bryant if he had known the result. But Mr. Bryant had the Lipton quality and he was not beaten, though his boat was.

YACHT CLUB ORGANIZED.

The next year (1904) the Grand Lake Yacht Club was organized and incorporated under the laws of Colorado, being, it is alleged, the only incorporated yacht club between the Mississippi and the coast. Omaha may have one, but the lake there is so shallow that they have to sprinkle it before a race so the sailors won't be smothered in the dust, and it doesn't count. At the first election of officers of the new club W. H. Bryant was made commodore and R. C. Campbell vice commodore, with various lieutenants, ensigns, cabin boys, cooks, chambermaids, seamen before the mast and citizens on foot and in carriages, so that every member of the club had an office.

A trophy cup was also provided made of native silver and other metals, and was called the Colorado Cup. Vice Commodore Campbell was building a palatial mansion in Denver about this time, and over the mantel in the main portcullis he had a niche constructed in which he proposed to place the cup and maintain it there. Mr. Bryant didn't say anything about this, but he was busy thinking. He was also busy getting a yacht from Chicago—something that had the speed of that famous horse, it is said you, the next year the Dorothy II appeared on the waters of the lake. She had come by rail from Chicago to Denver, thence by rail to a point sixty miles from the lake, thence over a mountain pass 11,000 feet high by team, and she floated on the water as if she had been born there.

Betimes the race was pulled off, and the Tom Tom was making a fierce struggle for victory, with some hopes of getting there, when a waloupawallopus one of those side winds from the mountain gorges, the terror of the mountain sailors, came down with a gust, and the Tom Tom got it abaft the beam or in the main lee swipper or somewhere—anyway, she turned turtle and the cup went to the Dorothy II. Mr. Bryant kindly sent a bolt of mourning goods to his rival with which to drape the empty niche in the Denver house.

TOO MUCH TABLECLOTH.

In 1903 Mr. Campbell showed up with the Jessica, a Grand Lake production, and was again defeated by the Dorothy. In 1903 Mr. Campbell added a tablecloth and all the family linen to the sail expanse of the Jessica and sent her after the cup. She turned turtle under the pressure and the Dorothy kept the cup. Nowise daunted Mr. Campbell now sought outside talent and in 1904 he appeared with the High Ball, a scow-built yacht from Chicago, by rail and team. Grand Lake is no prohibition locality, and the High Ball took the cup, to the unspeakable delight of Mr. Campbell, who forthwith carried it off to Denver and installed it in the niche he had constructed for it.

In the 1904 races a new contestant for the cup appeared. She was the Tub Tub, owned and sailed by Paul Cook of Denver. She was discovered several days later looking for the finish line, and has since gone out of commission.

The regatta week of this year of 1905 was a memorious occasion. There were three days' racing and three entries, the Duchess, owned and sailed by Paul Cook of Denver being added to the High Ball and the Dorothy. The first day both the High Ball and the Duchess turned turtle, the Dorothy alone staying right side up and winning. The second day, while the High Ball was coming down the home-stretch, a hundred yards ahead of the Dorothy, her peak halyards gave way, and, being unable to repair them, the Dorothy passed her and led under the wire. The Duchess lost her rudder and turned half a turtle. This result gave two heats, the race and the cup to the Dorothy, and the niche in the Campbell house is again empty. Best time, 110 miles, six miles.

PERILS OF SPORT.

Sailing on mountain lakes, as will be learned by the reports of these races, is not what it is on the big waters, and the sailor who cannot swim had better get another job. Especially dangerous are the unexpected winds—the willoupawallopus of some such animal—that rush out from the gorges of the surrounding mountains. So variable are these winds, that it is not unusual to see two boats, each before the wind, approach within a hundred yards of each other before they encounter a change of air.

Commission Day is the red-letter day in the yachting calendar of Grand Lake. This day is the first Monday in August, and is the opening day of the season, when the yachts go into commission and the fleet goes on its annual cruise, visiting all the ports of the lake. It is also the beginning of regatta week. The fleet at present consists of three active yachts, each twenty feet long, the Dorothy II, the High Ball and the Duchess. A fourth yacht is the Lone Star Margaret, owned by Major Lafayette Campbell of Denver. But she is not at Grand Lake. She is in the waters of the Gulf of Mexico, at Corpus Christi, Tex., where Major Campbell spends his winters.

GIRL TO SAIL IN AIRSHIP.

Will Accompany Her Father When He Tests Invention.

REPUBLIC SPECIAL.

Denver, Colo., Oct. 21.—If the invention of J. M. Oneal, of No. 335 Downing avenue, proves the success he expects he will have the first practical airship ever constructed. He will test it soon and one of his daughters will accompany him.

The airship is simple in construction. A cigar-shaped bag, inflated with hydrogen gas, raises the machine. Mr. Oneal says he will be able to steer it in any direction by the aid of his rudder, which consists of two intersecting planes set at right angles at the forward end of the ship. By lowering or raising the steering apparatus, Oneal asserts, he will be able to send his machine up or down.

Power is supplied by a gasoline motor which operates a little wheel at the rear end of a cylinder fifteen feet long and twenty-four inches in diameter. It is designed to create a suction through the cylinder, tending to force the ship forward and to act against the air in the machine's wake as a further propelling force.

An improved motor invented by Oneal will be used on the airship. Surrounding the axle, cylinder and pistons is a heavy fly wheel, bearing on its inner surface several curved flanges. The exhaust is double and arranged to strike each of these flanges. Considerable impetus is given the wheel in this way.

The air bag will be filled by a device also invented by Oneal. It consists of a tall iron pipe into which iron filings will be placed. Hot water will be passed over the filings, the reaction creating hydrogen gas. Oneal holds that this method will prove more effective than that generally in use of mixing iron filings and sulphuric acid in a vat.

DIGS UP CANNON THAT MADE HAWAII A NATION.

Resident of the Island Now in Possession of Relics That Had Been Buried a Hundred Years.

Honolulu, H. T., Oct. 21.—The two cannon which changed the destiny of the Hawaiian Islands have been unearthed and added to the valuable collection of Hawaiian relics owned by George C. Beckley, admiral of the local fleet of steamers in these islands.

The particular relics are in themselves insignificant enough, but to one who is familiar with Hawaiian history they possess the deepest significance. They are two old smooth-bore cannon.

These cannon were the famous battery that Kamehameha the Great used to effect his conquest of the islands of the Hawaiian group. The great Hawaiian conqueror succeeded in prevailing over all of the various chieftains and Kings by means of his battery of two pieces. They had been given to him by one of his white advisers and the King used them with deadly effect. The noise and fire from the two guns spread more terror among the superstitious enemies than the hordes of warriors that followed Kamehameha.

In 1793 the cannon were secretly buried and lay underground for more than a hundred years. The hiding place of the cannon was handed down by tradition through the family of one of the intimate retainers of the great King until finally Admiral Beckley learned the location of the two guns. The Admiral had them resurrected, and last Sunday installed them at his beach residence, a short distance from the favorite bathing place of Kamehameha the Great.

STUBBORN BULL STOPS TRAIN.

Fearing a Wreck, Train Crew Chases Animal Off Track.

REPUBLIC SPECIAL.

Stroudsburg, Pa., Oct. 21.—An obstinate bull held up a passenger train on the Delaware Valley Railroad near Shoemakersville. The beast was in the middle of the track, when Engineer Hiram Mann tooted the whistle of the locomotive vigorous toots, but failed to move the bull an inch. Fearing a wreck, the engineer brought his train to a standstill. The train crew alighted and the bull started down the track and came to a trestle. The bull never stopped, but made a leap and landed on the trestling, its legs going between the ties.

After a lot of tugging, the trainmen released the bull and pushed it down a bank before the train could get by.
