The Saturday Household Corner

Mr. Second Floor shouted through the megaphone.

A young couple who live on the second floor of a West End flat have been very much annoyed by the brutal language used by one of the first floor tenants toward his wife, many words of which were audible in the other apartment of the house so boisterous was the speaker.

A couple of weeks ago the head of one household, after complaint to the janitor and the agent had proved useless, decided to take matters into his own hands. He went to a sporting goods store and bought a big megaphone, such as the announcers at baseball games use. The next time the noise of the family downstairs was heard Mr. Second Floor turned over the inlets to his apartment speaker's window and shouted through the megaphone:

"Shut up, or I'll come down and beat your block off!"

For a minute there was profound silence, which was broken by applause from the windows of the other apartments whose tenants had been equally admonished.

"That was over a week ago, and the neighbors haven't heard a sound from the drinking husband since.

Unfortunates.

[illegible]

Not Comforting.

[illegible]

Hunter: "Does that dog of yours bite?" Hiram Hayseed: "Ye-e-s; I reckon he shakes 'em off thar whole."

NEW RECIPES.

OYSTER PIE AS—With the juice of all SIZE—One large [illegible] and the peel of two; [illegible] of [illegible] pounds of sugar, another of flour, [illegible] one [illegible] two minutes, [illegible] of [illegible] and [illegible] the [illegible] eggs [illegible] teaspoonfuls [illegible] half [illegible] Pre- [illegible] Salt and pepper [illegible] oranges by [illegible] [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]