Addresses will be made by the Reverend John F. Cannon of Grand Avenue Presbyterian Church, Judge Selden P. Spencer and George W. Alexander, general secretary of the St. Louis association. The meeting will be presided over by A. G. Brooks.

Sir George Williams began life in a London dry goods house and when still in his teens removed to London and formed the nucleus of the firm of Hitchcock, Williams & Co., of which he became head many years ago. He showed rare aptitude for business and rose step by step until he came to be recognized as the leading merchant princes of London. He was also prominent in more prominent fashion for his earnest Christian character, which manifested itself in a life of unselfish devotion not only in the Young Men's Christian Association, but also in the church and in a score of organizations of a religious and philanthropic character. He lived a prince, giver and a great worker.

Inspired by the religious fervor of the Civil War, he began the formation of the work which he had accomplished. Starting in a room in the Bank Buildings, the association has extended to all parts of the world, and it has been limited in its operations only by the limits of human endeavor. Great Britain and her colonies and the United States are extended to the whole world, so that it may be said that there is hardly a community in the civilized world that does not have a Young Men's Christian Association. The Sir George Williams association, but for him in more numerous in more different languages in more widely scattered lands, and at more different times than any other man who ever lived.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR TOPIC.

"Medical Missions at Home and Abroad." (Mark 1: 29—34.)

By A. McL. B. NELLIS.

Doctor Dennis, the well-known missionary statistician, figures on a total of 179 hospitals and 701 dispensaries on the foreign mission fields. These hospitals take care every year of 8,000 patients within their walls and at hospitals and dispensaries together 1,247,000 patients are cared for each year. In all 4,042,027 treatments are given. These figures, enormous as they are, would be more than doubled if we had statistics for similar institutions of the home lands.

The distribution of these blessed agencies is very uneven, though all lands are reached by them in some measure. China, where the natives suffer so fearfully for the lack of proper medical care, possesses the largest number of hospitals (42) and next to the largest number of dispensaries (240). India, a land also sadly in need of the physician—the land that received the first female medical missionary, Doctor Swain of the Methodist Church—has next to the largest number of hospitals (41) and the largest number of dispensaries (250).

Japan, whose splendid hospital system was established by Christian missionaries, has come largely to take care of that matter for herself. In all South America there are only three mission hospitals and three dispensaries, and in all Oceanica there are only two of each. Africa, with thirty-four hospitals and 107 dispensaries, comes third in the list, but the number falls far behind the appalling need.

Here is a Siamese prescription for a snake bite: Take parts of the jaws of a wild dog, a tame dog and a goat, parts of a goose bone and a peacock bone; parts of the tail of a fish and the head of a venomous snake. Mix and swallow. This is supposed to cure the patient when the snake's poison has caused lockjaw.

This is a fair sample of the crude ignorance and absurd superstition of the medical art in heathen lands. It would be too revolting to give details of the cruelties of that art—the senseless cuttings and stabbings to let out the evil spirits of the disease, the brutal burnings, the inhuman neglect, the terrible suffering of all sick ones, and especially of women and children. No one can learn the facts without the heartache.

On the other hand, medical missions are, as might be expected, the most rewarding branch of missionary work, when accompanied, as they are quite invariably, by earnest evangelism. The missionary doctor is a noble representative of the Great Physician. He—and especially she—can enter doors that are closed to all others. Harem and zenana, the highest ranks, the chamber of kings and powerful officers, the homes of the rich and learned and aristocratic, are all open to the medical missionary. To the hospitals and dispensaries come the poor in throngs. And to them all equally these servants of the healing Christ give loving ministry, cleansing their souls as they cleanse their sores, and opening their spiritual eyes as they restore their physical vision.
