HYMN OF THE CITY.

BY W. C. BRYANT.

Not in the solitude
Haunt God and meet Him; commune with Him amid the crowd of men, and hold communion with Him as with the friend of his youth. He will not be angry with you for your love of your fellow-creatures. He will not, jealous, claim your undivided love. He will not, as the idols of the heathen, require you to bow down your souls before Him in solitary places, and shut out your brethren from your adoration. He will not, as they, be well pleased with the smoke of burnt sacrifice, and the blood of slain animals, and the groaning of the oppressed creation. He will not, as they, be appeased by your self-torment, your self-mortification, your self-denial, your self-imposed poverty, your self-imposed ignorance. He will not, as they, be appeased by your ignorance of Him, your ignorance of your fellow-creatures, your ignorance of your own souls. He will not, as they, be appeased by your prostration of body and mind, your self-torture, your self-degradation, your self-murder. He will not, as they, be appeased by your self-exclusion from your fellow-creatures, your self-exclusion from your own kindred, your self-exclusion from your own home. He will not, as they, be appeased by your self-exclusion from your own country, your self-exclusion from your own kind, your self-exclusion from your own nature. He will not, as they, be appeased by your self-exclusion from your own self. He will not, as they, be appeased by your self-exclusion from your own God. He will not, as they, be appeased by your self-exclusion from your own heaven. He will not, as they, be appeased by your self-exclusion from your own hope. He will not, as they, be appeased by your self-exclusion from your own immortality. He will not, as they, be appeased by your self-exclusion from your own eternity. He will not, as they, be appeased by your self-exclusion from your own Saviour. He will not, as they, be appeased by your self-exclusion from your own Spirit. He will not, as they, be appeased by your self-exclusion from your own Bible. He will not, as they, be appeased by your self-exclusion from your own Sabbath. He will not, as they, be appeased by your self-exclusion from your own church. He will not, as they, be appeased by your self-exclusion from your own Christ. He will not, as they, be appeased by your self-exclusion from your own Christ. He will not, as they, be appeased by your self-exclusion from your own Christ
