The Recess.

AN ARCADIAN LOVE TALE.

A lovely scene, in sunshine's rosy edge,
Lived among these shepherds and their quiet flocks;
Tall oak that stood, and bright in golden hues
Which had shed Autumn's dews—sweet natural view
The mossed stone spread with colored moss fringe,
Cooling or something drinks! Pleasingly, oh,
A wildness stole by on the noble lips.
The moistened shepherds stared with joyful eyes
As he wooed pain; and shepherd girls sighed,
With wondering looks, to gaze upon his face,
And in his raiment of golden ruffles.
Thus lonely pace, and wave over the woods
To mind sweet thoughts, and marvel why they shook
With heart beat, and with tremors when he came,
And at the sight to filled their dreams with joy
Till days was the among that soft-eared band
Who gazed away with love of his bright eyes,
And dared among the mass of the spring.
Where Rita sat in the dew with closed lids,
Upon gentle hillsides, heeding Amor flown,
To spare upon her green and quiet glade.
They mutbed the band with love songs, low and sweet,
Songs sung of old romance the gentle night,
Songs heard on earth with a heart true and a blush,
Songs heard in Heaven by the beautiful ones.
(Alexander Pope.)

VANDERLYN'S ARIADNE.

How like a vision of pure love the seems!
Her cheek just flushed with innocent repose,
Thus Guido has thought to delineate dreams,
Lulled into delight in the shadow of the rose;
Fillmored upon her arm and seven hair,
How mildly state that bright and peaceful form
Its rounded pearl enhance hide to care,
While kisses on the lips seem pulsing now;
Frame in unconscious loveliness she lies,
And leaves around her delicately array
Veiled in the splendor of her burning eyes,
But ah! the tints bewitching power play
Into Eden's garden the serpent creeps,
Thus Eden within her truly author slept!
—Henry T. Tuckerman.

A PALPABLE PARODY.

"To the last sons of Parnassus,"—Moore.

"To the last golden dollar,
Left shining alone;
All its brilliant companions
Are squandered and gone;
No one of its mintage
Reflects back its hue;
They went on some pulpit
And this will go too!

I'll not keep that, then lose one
Too long in suspense;
The brethren were married,
And such then, is peace!
I ask for no quarter
Its spend and not spare,
Till my off-turned pocket
Like coulter and bare!

So now may I follow,
When Sunshine (Sexy)—
And from beggary's last dollar,
The dimes drop away!
When the Maid Law has passed,
And her progenies sink,
What one would be dollars,
Will nothing to drink!

"Tired of Farming."

A few months ago, a man who had been a farmer from his early life came to the city to buy stoves to sell again. Said he to the stove dealer, "The weevil begins to infest the wheat, and all things considered, I am 'tired of farming,' and so have sold my farm." The stove dealer remarked, that he thought within himself, that just as like as not the discontented farmer would find a weevil in the heart of the new business—and so it proved, for when the day arrived on which the note matured, given for the stoves, the old farmer, now turned tradesman, confessed that he had not been able to sell his stoves—that he had most of them on hand.

"Tired of farming," the most independent business a man can engage in, because, forsooth, there are disappointments and perplexities, and trials, and vexations attending it. Remember, you are the tillers of the soil, that your cares and troubles and anxieties are few and far between, compared with those suffered by commercial men. If your chances to become rich are not so inviting and profitable as those of the tradesman, bear in mind that the dangers of being very poor and destitute are far less. Famine and abject poverty seldom overtake the farmer, or haunt him in their ghostly visits. He lives on high table land of promise, rising far above the murky region of want and destitution. His children can say there is bread enough in our father's house, and a piece to spare to the hungry of other less fortunate callings.

"Tired of farming." Supposing you are, what is to be done in such a case? Do you expect to find any employment without trials and perplexities? If so, you are doomed to disappointment. There is no vocation in this world that will exempt those that are engaged therein, from cares and fears and vexations. So if you are tired of farming, the best way is to get rested just as soon as you can, and prosecute anew the business for which you were early trained, and which, if diligently followed, will yield a good supply of all the necessaries and comforts of life, together with opportunities for mental and moral culture.—[Rural New Yorker.

How Deacon Smith Courted the Widow

The Deacon's wagon stopped one morning before the Widow Jones' door, and he gave the usual country signal that he wanted somebody in the house, by dropping the reins, and sitting double with his elbows on his knees. Out tripped the widow, lively as a cricket, with a tremendous black ribbon on her snow white cap. Good morning was soon said on both sides, and the widow waited for what was further to be said.

"Well, ma'am Jones, perhaps you don't want to sell one of your cows, no how, for nothing, any way, do you?"

"Well, there, Mr. Smith, you could not have spoke my mind better. A poor lone widow like me don't know what to do with so many critters, and I should be glad to trade if we can fix it."

So they adjourned to the meadow. Deacon Smith looked at the Rosa—then at the widow—at Brindle—then at the widow—at the Downing cow—and at the widow again, and so through the whole forty. The same call was made every day for a week, but the Deacon could not decide which cow he wanted. At length, on Saturday, when Widow Jones was in a hurry to get through her baking for Sunday—and had ever so much to do in the house, as all farmer's wives and widows have on Saturday, she was a little impatient. Deacon S. was as irresolute as ever:

"That 'ere Downing cow is a pretty fair critter," said he, "but—" he stopped to glance at the widow's face, and then walked around her—not the widow but the cow.

"That 'ere short horn Durham is not a bad looking beast, but I don't know"—another look at the widow.

"The Downing cow I know before the late Mr. Jones bought her." Here he sighed at the allusion to the late Mr. Jones—she sighed, and both looked at each other. It was a highly interesting moment.

"Old Rosa is a faithful old milch, and so is Brindle—but I have known a better." A long stare succeeded this speech—the person was getting awkward—and at last Mrs. Jones broke out—

"Lord! Mr. Smith, if I'm the cow you want, do say so!"

The intentions of Deacon Smith and the Widow Jones, were duly published the next day, according to the law and custom—and as soon as they were "out published," they were married.

Music at the Museum;
Or, Mr. Bangum's Balcony Brass Band.

Mr. Bangum was sitting in his office in the Museum the other day, when he heard a knock at the door.

"Come in," said he.

The door opened, and a trombone entered. Mr. Bangum started. The trombone was followed by an arm, and the arm by a body, the body belonged to no less a personage than Mr. E. Fant.

"Mr. Bangum?" said Mr. F.

"That's my name," said that gent.

"Good morning," said Mr. F.

"Good morning," said Mr. B.

"I see you have a band on your balcony," began Mr. Fant.

"Yes," said Mr. Bangum.

"And I came to see if I could get a situation there on trombone."

"I presume you can," said Mr. B., "if we can agree upon terms."

"During what hours should I play?" asked Mr. Fant.

"They usually play," said Mr. B., "from two to three in the afternoon, and from seven to eight in the evening."

"What is the place worth?"

"Five dollars a week."

"Very well," said Mr. Fant, with great satisfaction. He had not expected more than three or four.

"You can begin to-day, if you like," said Mr. B. "Payments weekly."

"Very well," said Mr. Fant.

In accordance with this arrangement, Mr. Fant's trombone did duty for a week on Bangum's balcony, and very hard, too, did Mr. Fant bone away on his trombone. At the end of the week, he called on Mr. B. for his week's pay.

"I will make out a bill if you like," said Mr. B.

"If you please," said Mr. F.

After a little turning over of leaves and computing books, Mr. B. handed him the bill. He read it over once, twice, three times, looking every time more and more mystified. At last he said:

"Mr. Bangum, you have made a little mistake here, I believe."

"Eh?" said Mr. Bangum; "not that I am aware of."

"Yes," said Mr. Fant, smiling. He could'nt help smiling to think how Mr. Bangum would laugh when he learned what the mistake was.

"It's rather a funny mistake. I don't see how you came to make it. The bill reads:

"Mr Eli Fant to P. T. Bangum, Dr.
To privilege of playing a trombone in his museum, for the week ending May 14, 1853, $5."

"Well," said Mr Bangum, "I believe it was five dollars, wasn't it?"

"Yes—s," said Mr Fant, perplexed; "I believe it was. But I didn't look at it in that light."

"In what light did you look at it?" said Mr Bangum.

"Why," said Mr Fant, still more perplexed, "I thought you paid me five dollars, not I you."

"Oho! no," said Mr Bangum. "This is the state of the case. There are quite a number of persons in this city who wish to practice such instruments, but cannot do it at home, on account of disturbing the neighbors, so I let them a standing up place on the balcony; and each gentleman comes here, brings what instruments he likes, and practices whatever he wants to, without disturbing anybody; that is, anybody we care any thing about."

The office-door opened, and the trombone went out, followed by Mr Fant; while Mr Bangum proceeded to make out his bills against the other instruments. Mr Fant has since given up the trombone. L. A.

RICH, RARE AND RACY.—We were amused not a little by a story told by a Vermonter. It was spring-time, and frost had disappeared for the season, when a stalwart fellow whose name was Lockwood went to the cattle yard to feed the animals. The deposits in the yard were hard at the bottom, but the bottom was two feet below the surface. Among the cattle was an ugly bull, and as Lockwood was busy, his lordship turned suddenly, knocking him down. Lockwood sprang up "all fired mad," and caught the bull's tail between his teeth, biting it through and through. Of course the animal was impressed with the power of motion, and made a bolt which brought Lockwood upon his face, dragging him a dozen yards, until freed from his tormentor. Mr Bull crouched in a corner shaking his head and giving vent to a suppressed bellow. Lockwood waded to another corner, and as he eyed his antagonist, shook his head in derision and shouted, "yes moo-cow-ooo and be darned to ye, let ye cussed critter I'd like to know who begun it?"—[Cleavland Herald.

The editor of the New Orleans Picayune is looking from the window of his sanctum, and pens the following of the view there from:

"In that other yard—which seems the loneliest of them all—ten years ago a terrible scene was enacted. Two men, merchants and partners in the store to which the yard was attached, fought a duel with knives. They both had married sisters, and one day one of the parties found that the other had dishonored his wife, and death alone could wipe from memory the terrible disgrace. The guilty and wretched woman was the first victim. Her husband stabbed her to the heart even while she slept, and she awoke in another world. The partners went, with but one witness, to this yard, and placing a huge hogshead in the centre of the narrow space, they got into it, and the second handed them the knives. The struggle lasted but ten minutes. The husband was avenged, for the souls of both joined that of the murdered wife."

"Job Sass," one of the correspondents of the Boston Herald, lately attended Commencement at Cambridge, and after giving an account of the exercises was much interested in the conferring of degrees. On this subject he thus writes:

THE GEOMETRIC TRANSFER.—The undersigned is agent for the sale of the Geometric Transfer, as mentioned for drafting rooms, invented by Mr James Stephens, of Lockport, N. Y., and which is proved to furnish the truth in this state. The price of the Transfer, together with the book and suitable instructions for using, is $10. I am using the instrument myself, and do not hesitate to say that it is the best one I have ever seen for obtaining a correct form and correct copy. D. WILKINSON
