DISINFECTANTS.

By EDWIN M. snow, M. D., Superintendent of Health, Providence, R. I.

The use of disinfectants to purify the pure air, especially during the present month, is of the very first importance, and should be universal. The expense of the substances is very slight and within the reach of all, and if any person is unable to purchase them they will be furnished free of expense. Under these circumstances, certainly no one has a right to poison his family, or his neighbor's family, with the foul air of privy vaults, cesspools, or other deposits of filth. Aside from the very great danger to health, it would seem that the sensibilities of comfort alone might induce everybody to use disinfectants freely. One of the cheapest and best disinfectants is this:

1. Take five (5) pounds of copperas and dissolve in three or four gallons of the purest of hot water, mixing with it half a pint of crude carbolic acid. Larger quantities in the same proportion.

This can be used freely in cellars of sick rooms and all offensive places or passages. The first one is a most comprehensive question, and may be necessary, after but a small quantity comparatively will be sufficient.

The copperas, or quantities of five pounds or more, will cost three cents per pound, and the carbolic acid will cost one dollar and twenty-five cents per gallon, so that a gallon of the disinfectant will not cost more than twenty-five cents.

2. Another liquid disinfectant, excellent to pour into sink pipes and water closets or houses, is the chloride of lime dissolved, supposed to a gallon of water. It is inexpensive, and may be used freely wherever needed. The chloride of lime will cost about twenty-five cents per pound.

3. Permanganate of potash is an excellent chemical disinfectant to purify cistern water that has become offensive. The quantity necessary can only be determined by trial. Dissolve a quarter of a pound of the crude or impure permanganate of potash in five or three quarts of water and pour it into the cistern, stirring it well from the bottom. If necessary repeat the dose. The impure permanganate of potash will cost about one dollar per pound.

4. Crude carbolic acid, largely diluted with water, makes a most valuable disinfectant to sprinkle in yards, about privies, on heaps of filth, in filthy times, and especially upon offensive manure in stables. It will prevent offensive odors and also drive away flies. The crude article, containing twenty-five to thirty per cent. of carbolic acid, will cost about $1.25 per gallon, and one gallon is sufficient to mix with one barrel of water, stirring it briskly when used.

5. Carbolate of lime, and several disinfecting powders in market containing carbolic acid, are all valuable, and safe to sprinkle freely in cellars, yards, and in any place where foul air is perceived. Chloride of lime dry, and giving off chloride gas, acts quickly to remove offensive odors, and is often very valuable for this purpose, on account of its speedy and diffusive action. But chloride of lime soon absorbs moisture, and loses its power, so that for most uses as a disinfectant, it is not as valuable as carbolate of lime, and other powders containing carbolic acid.

6. Ventilation, and whitewashing with fresh lime are the best disinfectants for cellars, and dark, damp places. In addition let the sunlight and fresh air into all such places when it is possible.

There will be no epidemic of cholera here this month, or this year; but cholera infantum, diarrhœa and other diseases which might be prevented to some extent by disinfectants, will certainly be here, and will probably destroy more lives than the cholera would if it were present. But it is now as always before; we fret ourselves greatly, and strive to turn the world upside down about a disease that only appears at long intervals, and is comparatively of slight importance, while we take no special heed of diseases which are with us every year destroying hundreds of lives. Let us now, and at all times, use disinfectants freely and prevent all the impure air that it is possible to prevent; but always remember that the use of disinfectants is only an apology for filth, and that our greatest efforts should be made to thoroughly remove all sources of impure air, and thus render the use of disinfectants unnecessary.

West Albany Horse Market—Where the Animals Come From.

The horse market at West Albany is one of the largest in the country. West Albany dealers trade in all classes except the California and Kentucky racers. By far, the largest part of the horses sold, however, come from the West, mainly from Ohio, Indiana, Michigan and Iowa. Canada horses are still obtainable, although the regions just across the line have been pretty throughly scoured, but the high duties—about $40 on every $100 worth of horse-flesh—make it impossible for dealers to sell there as low as Western horses, which sell fully as readily at the same prices owing to their larger build. Hence it is that most of the dealers have gone West for their horses, and each year are working farther and farther towards the Rocky mountains. The method of obtaining at the West differs considerably from that pursued in New England and Canada. Here the trader is obliged to go around from farm to farm, picking up a horse here and there, as he finds those that suit him. But in the West, they do things differently, horses, like vegetables etc., being raised there on a larger scale, and generally being allowed to run in herds over the large stock farms until such time as they are wanted. Hence the trader usually establishes some rendezvous near the stock raisers with whom he is accustomed, to deal and collects all his horses there before shipping them for the East.

A PECULIARLY SAD CASE.—Mis Margaret Van Allen, a beautiful girl nineteen years of age, was buried in New York recently. Two years ago she became a clerk in the dry goods establishment of Muscovitz & Russell, University place, from which she honorably retired to accept a better position. Soon after it was ascertained that goods had been bought of A. T. Stewart & Co., on a forged order of Muscovitz & Russell. After the firm had arrested several girls and had been unable to prove anything against them, they caused Miss Van Allen to be arrested. They placed her in a cell in the Charles street police station and kept her locked up until the next morning. Miss Van Allen was then taken to the Jefferson Market police court, where she endured for nearly three hours the horrors of the prisoner's pen and the society of the vilest of the city; but as there was not a shadow of proof against her Justice Cox released her on her own recognizance. She went home and was taken down that day with jail fever, of which she died. Her death causes intense excitement throughout the city. In the funeral sermon the Rev. Mr. Rhodes pronounced her death sheer murder.

REWARD.—At a special meeting at Exeter N. H., the selectmen were authorized and instructed to offer a reward of $3000 for the detection of the "fire bug" that is evidently at work at that place.

DID'NT WAKE UP.—A Hartford Connecticut chap named Barrett, while dead drunk, fell from a fourth story window, Friday evening, his clothes catching on the pickets of a fence. He was not injured, nor even aroused.

KILLED.—A lightening rod peddler was killed by lightning recently, in Streeter County Ohio. He was buried by the sympathizing farmers.

A PECULIAR CASE.—Mrs. Eliphalet Hancock of Chicopee Falls, now eighty-three years old, has lain for five years on one side at the house of her son, Albert Hancock. She has been all the time sick from water around the heart, and the physicians say any change of position would result in death. She is only raised at times directly up for her bed to be made. She suffers but little pain and is remarkably cheerful.

The difference between honor and honesty seems to be chiefly the motive; the more honest man does that from duty, which the man of honor does for the sake of character.

ADVERSITY.—Adversity evaporates fools, dejects cowards, draws out fortitude of the wise, puts the modest to the necessity of trying their skill, sets the opulent, and makes the life industrious. Much may be said in favor of adversity, but the worst of it is, it has no friends.

TAPEWORM.—A dropsical patient at Avon Maine has been tapped ten times since April, and 266 pounds of water taken from him.

MONKEYS.—The monkey does possess intelligence and usefulness after all. At least one in New Orleans that pulled a child off the railroad track just as the train was coming the other day, was credited with both these attributes.

CURSED.—The governor of Illinois recently pardoned a penitentiary convict because they said he was dying of consumption. That pardon did more for that young man than would have been done by twenty dozen bottles of cod-liver oil. In twenty-four hours his lungs were as sound as if they had been made of brass.

NATURAL DIVORCE.—A woman who had repeatedly but unvailingly besieged a well-known lawyer at Greenfield to assist her in getting divorced from her husband, came into his office the other day, her face radiant with joy, and exclaimed: "Squire, the old man's dead!"

AN ILLUMINATED PATH.

And thou hast stolen a jewel, Death!
Shall light thy dark up like a star,
And beacon kindling from afar
Our light of love, and fainting faith,
Through tears it gleams perpetually,
And glitters through the thickest glooms,
Till the eternal morning comes
To light us over the jasper sea.
