For the Children.

"No Crown for Me."

"Won't you come with us, Susan?" cried several children, as they stopped before a cottage, at the open window of which a little girl sat knitting. "We are going to the wood to look for primroses and violets; we shall be sure to find plenty this lovely day: do come with us."

"I should like to go very much," replied Susan with a sigh, "but I cannot."

"Why?"

"Because I have not yet done my task."

"Ask your mother to let you leave it unfinished."

"It would be of no use. Mother never lets me play till I have finished all my work."

"How tiresome it must be, having to stay at home to work on a holiday! But Susan's mother is very strict," cried a little fair-haired girl, tossing her head as much as to say, "I would never submit to such discipline." "Very strict," repeated several of the children, looking with pity at Susan.

Susan heard the remarks of her schoolfellows; and, as they walked slowly away, she watched them till they turned the corner of the lane leading to the wood, and the sound of their happy voices died away in the distance. She bent her head over her work, and wiped away her tears; and then, instead of trying to finish her work, she went out and sat on a fallen tree, gazing on the flowers and birds.—She thought of the pleasant afternoon her companions would spend, while she, poor Susan, was condemned to remain at home; and why? To knit a few rows of a stocking.

Oh, why was she not free—free as the birds she heard singing in the branches of the trees? My dear young friends, Susan was not a worse child than many amongst you. Her pious mother had taught her that prayer is the only safeguard against temptation: she understood well that every child who desires to do the will of God must be submissive to its parents; and, besides, she knew well that that her mother had good reasons for making her work: for she was a poor widow, and had nothing to leave her little Susan but habits of industry.

At this moment the little girl remembered none of these things; but, trembling and undecided, Susan said to herself, "I shall still have time to catch them," as a merry laugh, which could only be that of Rose Blanchard's, sounded in the distance. Ah! little Susan, why did you not check this wicked thought when it came into your heart? She then returned to the cottage, and took up her work again. "What harm can there be," she said, "in moving the mark mother put in the stocking? Why need I be so strict? How beautiful the wood must be, and how I should enjoy a game with my companions!"

"Mother," cried Susan an instant after, opening the door of the room where Mrs. Williams was busily employed ironing and folding linen, "I am ready now."

"What! already, Susan?" replied her mother. "You have been very industrious," she added, as she took the work, and passed her hand lovingly over the glossy brown hair of the little girl. But Susan's cheeks were as scarlet, and she did not raise her eyes while her mother examined the stocking. As she did so a cloud passed over her face, and an expression of pain replaced the smile which was habitual to her.

"True, Susan," said she, laying a stress on each word; "true, I count twenty turns from the mark; and, as my daughter has never deceived me, I will allow her to go and amuse herself as she likes for the rest of the day."

Poor Susan, she had obtained the much desired permission, and yet she did not utter her usual hearty "Thank you," nor throw her arms around her mother's neck and bid her good-by, with a kiss, as she always did when any great favor was granted her. She looked absent and melancholy as she left the cottage, and stood for a moment undecided whether to take the turn to the wood or not. She walked slowly to join her school-fellows, instead of skipping and jumping, as was her usual habit.

"Why, here is Susan?" they cried. "How glad we are to see you! how did you manage to come so soon!"

"So you were able to get leave from your mother after all," said Susan's greatest friend: "but what is the matter?"

"There is nothing the matter." As Susan repeated these words she felt that she was trying to deceive herself. A still small voice, which God has put into the heart of each one of us, spoke to this guilty child. Her mother's last words sounded in her ears—"My daughter has never deceived me."

"Yes, I have deceived her," she repeated to herself. "Oh! if mother knew all, she would never love me any more; she would never have any confidence in me again."

"Let us make a crown of daisies'" cried Rose, "and we will place it on the head of the best girl amongst us. Only," she added, with a mischevious look, "I give you all notice beforehand, that if you try to place it on mine I shall decline the honor".

"Don't be the least afraid," answered one of the girls; the garland itself would refuse to be put on such a head as yours."

"It will be easy enough to make the crown," remarked Susan, "but I think it will be more difficult to decide who is to wear it."

"Who? why, you, of course, Susan," said Rose laughing; "you are the best girl in school, the most obedient at home, the most, yes, I will say it," she added more seriously—"the most conscientious of us all.

"Yes, yes; the crown shall be for Susan," cried all the little girls; and while some hastened to gather primroses and violets—for it was decided that daisies were not to be the only flowers used—the others set to work to make the crown.

Susan sat silent and lost in thought, looking on, but taking no part in the work, or in the general joy.

"There, now it is finished. Oh, how pretty!" cried Rose, skipping and dancing round the crown. "Now, Susan, put on a very dignified air, for we are going to salute you as queen." As she spoke she placed the flowers on Susan's head. The latter, after a moment's hesitation, snatched off the wreath and dashed it on the ground, "No! no crown for me—I do not deserve it."

The girls, not understanding the reason of this strange behavior, looked at their companion in astonishment, whilst in her heart a fierce struggle was going on, and she was striving hard for victory.

Courage, Susan, courage; the best way to repair a wrong is to own it. Do not be ashamed of telling your fault to your companions and your good mother; you will thus be more ready to seek pardon of your heavenly Father, for which your heart longs.

"I have deceived my dear mother," the little girl at last cried, in a firm voice, in spite of the tears which ran down her cheeks. "I deceived her before I came. Oh, how unhappy I am! I must run home as fast as I can."

"What did you do?" cried Julia.

"I altered the mark that mother put in my stocking, that I might come and join you all."

"And do you think that is a sin?" asked a little child called Lizzie, looking very much surprised.

"I am quite certain it is; for I have been so unhappy all the time I have been talking and laughing with you, and trying not to think about it.

Susan's heart beat fast, and her voice trembled, when on entering the cottage she ran to her mother and said, "Dear mother, I deserve to be punished; for I deceived you by altering the mark you put in my stocking. Can you forgive me! Oh, do, for it has made me so unhappy; I will pray to God to give me a better heart, that I may never be so naughty as to vex you again."

Her mother's eyes glistened joyfully, and Susan thought she heard her whisper, "I thank thee, O Lord!" Looking tenderly at her child, "Susan," said, she "I knew it at the time."

"And you let me go out, mother?"

"Yes, Susan, for I hoped my little girl's conscience would accuse her of having done wrong. Once more," she added, with an expression of thankfulness, "my heavenly Father has granted my prayer."

There was something in these words, "Once more," which would have comforted and encouraged more than one mother, and it went straight to the heart of the penitent child.

"And what is my punishment to be?" asked Susan, timidly looking up into her mother's face.

"On the first fine holiday you must knit three times the number of rows you left undone to-day," replied her mother, in a firm, but gentle tone.

"And when shall I be your own little Susan again?" whispered the child, leaning her head against her mother's shoulder.

"Now," was the answer, as her mother kissed her forehead.

When she went to rest that night, Susan knelt beside her bed, and again confessed her sin to her Savior, humbly thanking him for giving her a tender conscience.

S. D. & H. W. SMITH'S American Organs.

The most perfect and beautiful musical instruments in the world!

Seventeen First Premiums over all competitors at State Fairs during the month of October.

With a reputation established solely upon intrinsic merit, and without the aid of celebrated names and paid testimonials, the AMERICAN ORGANS have taken the highest rank as First-Class Instruments, and are justly acknowledged to have no superior.

The attention of the public is called to the AMERICAN ORGAN as an instrument long sought for in the family circle, which, with new patent improvements, is adapted to all kinds of music, particularly the connected organ style with its sustained tones and harmonies, and Sacred music, so much desired in American homes.

The AMERICAN ORGANS excel all other instruments of the kind in many important particulars. They are superior in their greater fullness and depth of tone, capacity of expression, elasticity of touch, and quickness of action, rendering them perfect in rapid movements.

The AMERICAN ORGANS are constructed on the principle of the large Pipe Organ, and in depth and sonority of tone approach nearer that grand instrument than any other organ yet manufactured, and are the only real reed organs now before the public. Most so-called "organs" consist simply of the action fastened upon the bellows as in the common melodeon, and enclosed in an organ case; but the AMERICAN ORGANS contain an organ wind-chest, called the reverberating sound box, which has the same important part to perform as the sounding-board in a piano forte, to give body and resonance of tone. On account of this and other great improvements the AMERICAN ORGANS rank the first in the market, and command a higher price than all other reed instruments. Besides this wind chest, the AMERICAN ORGANS contain the largest bellows used in any instrument of the kind, giving strength and steadiness of tone, truly a desideratum in any organ.

The bellows being provided with a safety valve, it is impossible to "choke" the tone by over blowing.

The improved knee-swell, being placed at the right of the performer, is managed with perfect ease. By its use, the quantity of tone may be gradually increased or diminished from the Pianissimo to the Fortissimo, and vice versa.

The Sforzando expression may also be introduced at pleasure, swelling particular notes with the orchestral effects, which are absolutely impractical and unattainable in all "automatic" or similar attachments.

The Tremolo peculiar to the AMERICAN ORGANS is universally admired and appreciated, giving a pleasing and beautiful variety sympathetic in quality, and is capable of the most touching effects.

In connection with the Tremolo is the Patent Forte Stop, which consists in so arranging the treble notes in front, that, at will, they may be made more prominent; and, with a subdued accompaniment, a fine solo effect may be produced.

The Reeds are voiced with great care and skill. An American Organ containing more than one set of reeds has a variety in the voicing of each set, so that in using the full power the tones blend into great volume, and they are so voiced that they will remain in tune for years.

The AMERICAN ORGANS are superior in the mechanical finish of the action and interior musical parts. The valves are of material expressly prepared to avoid all sticking or cracking; are thus durable and will always be in order.

The Keys, Reeds, &c., are perfect in their finish, and this gives the quickness and brilliancy of tone.

The AMERICAN ORGANS are finished in the highest style of art, in Rosewood, Jet, Walnut and Oak cases, richly Varnished, Polished and Engraved or in Smooth Oil Polish, forming elegant pieces of furniture for the Parlor; and the Walnut and Oak cases especially adapted for Churches, Lecture, School and Lodge rooms.

We call special attention to the style of AMERICAN ORGAN, containing the super-octave coupler and sub-bass, for churches in want of a powerful instrument, whose means are limited, its moderate price renders it very desirable.

It contains seven stops, and is capable of great variety.

The AMERICAN ORGANS all contain the Double Bellows, Tremolo, Reverberating Sound-box, and improved Knee-swell.

These instruments have a capacity from the single reed five-octave organ, through all the various combination of reeds, up to eight sets and sixteen stops. The power of the large pedal organ is very great, the deep sub-bass tones having the strength and depth of the sixteen-feet pipes in the large pipe organs.

This latter instrument is finished in an upright case, and is adapted for large churches, and for the use of conventions, oratorio performances, &c.

Every instrument is fully warranted to prove good and give satisfaction, and the public may always rely on being fairly and honorably treated. Organs are securely boxed (free of charge) to go any distance.

UNSOLICITED TESTIMONY.

From Rev. Francis Lobdell, Pastor of the South Congregational Church, Bridgeport, Connecticut.

BRIDGEPORT, Jan. 21, 1864.

Gentlemen—I consider it a duty which I owe suffering humanity to bear testimony to the virtues of Dr. WISTAR'S BALSAM OF WILD CHERRY. I have used it—when I have had occasion for any remedy for Coughs, Colds or Sore Throat—for many years, and never, in a single instance, has it failed to relieve and cure me. I have frequently been very hoarse on Saturday, and looked forward to the delivery of two sermons on the following day with sad misgivings, but by a liberal use of the Balsam my hoarseness has invariably been removed, and I have preached without difficulty.

I commend it to my brethren in the ministry, and to public speakers generally, as a certain remedy for the throat troubles to which we are peculiarly exposed.

Hoping its extended sale may be the result of this testimonial, which you are at liberty to use in any way you choose. Perhaps the Balsam does not affect all persons alike, but it always removes my hoarseness, and fits me for the minister's hard work on the Sabbath.

Very truly yours, FRANCIS LOBDELL.

AYER'S CATHARTIC PILLS

Are the most perfect of cathartics which science or genius or money has ever yet been able to give anybody. They are so abundantly shown to be the best by the community from whom they expect the ordinary pills in use. They are so pleasant to take, and so sure to cure. Their purifying properties stimulate vital activities of the system, drive the disease from its organs, purify the blood, and expel disease. They purge on the foul humors that breed and grow distemper, stimulate sluggish or disordered organs into their natural action, and impart a healthy tone with strength to the whole system. Not only are they the every-day complaints of everybody, but the formidable and dangerous diseases. While they are the most powerful effects, they are at the same time, in small doses, the safest and best physic that can be used for children. Being sugar-coated, they are pleasant to take; and, being purely vegetable, are free from all risk of harm. Cures have been made which seem almost to tax belief, were they not substantiated by men of such position or untruth. Many eminent clergymen and physicians have lent their names to certify to the power and reliability of our remedies, while others have sent us assurance of their conviction that our preparations contribute immensely to the relief of our afflicted, suffering fellow men.

The Agents below named are pleased to furnish our American Almanac, containing directions, testimonials and certificates of their cures of the following complaints:

Costiveness, bilious complaints, rheumatism, dyspepsia, heartburn, headache arising from foul stomach, sick headache, indigestion, morbid inaction of the bowels and pain arising therefrom, flatulency, loss of appetite, all of which require an evacuant medicine. They also purify the blood and stimulate the sluggish system, for such complaints which it would not be supposed they could reach, such as deafness, partial blindness, neuralgia, nervous irritability, derangements of the liver and kidneys, gout and other kindred complaints arising from a low state of the body, or obstruction of its functions.

Do not be put off by unprincipled dealers who offer other preparations which they make more profit on. Get AYER'S and take no others. The sick want the best that there is for them, and they should have it.

Prepared by J. C. AYER CO., Lowell, Mass., and sold by J. C. Bingham and S. Randall, St. Johnsbury, and by other dealers in medicine everywhere.
