THE SPRING PARADE

In Memory of St. Patrick is Favored With the Brightest Day.

AN EXCEPTIONALLY NICE TURNOUT

Though Its Numbers Are Depleted by Reason of a Large Funeral.

WHO WERE IN THE LINE OF MARCHERS

The green badges, sashes, ribbons, flags and tassels incidental to the customary parade on St. Patrick's Day, never looked brighter or pleasanter than they did yesterday in the reflections from a clear, blue sky and the glare of the warm sun.

The traditional rain of the day was conspicuous only by its absence, and if the parade on that account was of more than an ordinarily fine success, it is not to be wondered at.

In spite of the beautiful weather, however, the number of people in the procession was not so large as it was in former years. One of the reasons was the fact that the anniversary fell on Sunday, and another that a large division from the Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel Workers and Lodge 111, of the Ancient Order of Hibernians, from Homestead, were not in the procession. The reason for this was that John Havicken, a member of both of these organizations and a worker at the Edgar Thompson Steel Works, had died on Friday and was buried yesterday. He was taken to his resting place in St. Mary's cemetery, and a procession of over 1,000 people followed his remains thither.

CREDITABLE NEVERTHELESS.

But, apart from this absent contingent, the St. Patrick's procession presented a very fine and impressive appearance as the different divisions marched down Fifth avenue.

It was frequently remarked that the men seemed to have a more elastic and even step than usual, a fact which is easily explained, when it is considered that streets covered with rain and slush, as they were last year, are not well adapted for marching purposes.

There was an unusually large number of spectators stationed around the corners of Smithfield street and Fifth avenue. But everything passed of very quietly. Outward demonstration by the lookers-on was scarcely indulged in, except when a body of the processionists distinguished itself especially by a show of pleasing and attractive appearance.

The Hibernian Rifles, represented by Companies A, B, C and D, headed the parade, led by the Chief Marshal and his staff.

The different bands of music and drum corps heading the various divisions, all played very well, and their excellent music added considerably to the general success of the marching.

After the line had been formed on Grant street the command to march was given at 11:30 o'clock to pass down Fifth avenue in the following order:

ORDER OF PROCESSION.

Chief Marshal, William Rochford; Adjutant General, Thomas Burke; Chief of Staff, William McFarland.
