A PLULOCRAT'S PLOT.

The Means Used to Entrap a Young Man Into the Penitentiary.

QUITE A ROMANCE IN REAL LIFE.

A Mother Tells the Story of the Persecution of Her Son.

ARRESTED ON MANY FALSE CHARGES.

Perfidious Attorneys Play a Prominent Part in the Narrative.

The real depths of a Chicago millionaire's plot against a poor young man are now revealed. The latter's mother tells the story of her woes.

CHICAGO, August 24.—For some days past fragments of a romance have been coming to light, but it was not until to-day that the narrative took any definite shape, or any authority was given for its publication. The actual name of the young fellow, who, under that of George Dunning, is serving a four years' term in the penitentiary as the result of a millionaire's daughter falling in love with him, is Ernest Dunnivant. His father, G. F. Dunnivant, an old Chicago printer, died four years ago, leaving a wife, seven daughters and two sons, the elder being Ernest.

Upon the earnings of Ernest the family were dependent after the death of the father until the former went to the penitentiary. Since then the family's existence has been maintained by a severe struggle. The mother, Mrs. Belle Dunnivant, who now lives at 232 Chestnut street, was called on this morning by a reporter and asked to tell her story. It was with great reluctance that she consented to do so, "because," she said, the tears springing to her eyes and trickling down her careworn face, "Because the man who sent him there is so rich, so powerful, that I am afraid he would do more harm than he has already done."

THE MOTHER'S STORY.

Mrs. Dunnivant was assured that nothing need be feared. She then thought that publication of her statement might be hurtful to the young lady in the case. Reassured on this point, she consented to tell what she knew.

"It was in the summer of 1885, I think, some time after my husband died, that I bought Ernest a newspaper route for $150. He worked at it faithfully, and earned about ten dollars a week. The route ran for some distance along Dearborn avenue, and it was while delivering his papers that he met the young lady as she went from her home to Mrs. Grant's Academy. Ernest was a handsome boy, and his looks and manners seemed to attract her attention, and although I am not familiar with just how they became acquainted, I know that they finally became very much interrested in each other and used to meet in Lincoln Park. I did not know of this at the time, and in fact knew nothing of it until fall.

"Finally, after a month or so of intimate acquaintance, the family of the young lady heard of it, and tried to break it up. A most close watch was kept on the young lady, and meetings were for a time stopped. Ernest went by the house one day and asked of the coachman something concerning the young lady. The coachman who had a warrant sworn out for Ernest's arrest and had the coachman serve it. My boy was caught in the street, and taken to the East Chicago avenue station and kept all night. There was nothing against him to punish him for, but instead of letting him go free a $25 fine was imposed and suspended.

"After that things went on as before until one day the young lady met Ernest and told him that the evening previous she overheard her father in the library tell a detective that Ernest was bothering him, and that he wanted the detective to follow Ernest and try to catch him in some crime and send him to jail and keep him out of the way. My poor boy, whose only sin was to be loved by the daughter of the man who wanted him in jail."

Mrs. Dunnivant sobbed convulsively for a few moments, and then continued:

"The detective followed Ernest everywhere for a long time, and finally he was arrested on a charge of burglary. Ernest was wholly innocent, but he was sentenced to 60 days in the county jail. When he got out, he received a note from the young lady, who had gone with her family to Geneva Lake, asking him to come to Geneva and see her.

A FATAL NOTE.

"Ernest got permission from me to spend a few days in the country, I supposed, just for a little outing. Well, he went to Geneva Lake and met the young lady's little sister. He gave her a note for the young lady, but the little girl gave it to a nurse who gave it to the father's son-in-law. When that young man read the note he took the coachman and set out to find Ernest. They found him, and threatened to throw him into the lake. I don't think they did so, but something happened, for Ernest did not come back for two or three days, and then without his hat.

"The young lady was sent from Geneva Lake to a school in Ogantz, Pa., and it was then I learned of the detectives dogging my boy. I immediately sold out the route and tried to get him a situation. The young lady wrote, I believe, to an employe of her father in South Chicago, who had professed a solicitous friendship for her and promised to give Ernest something to do. He saw Ernest and told him to come out to South Chicago. Ernest went there with Frank Allen, of whom Ernest knew but little. Allen got Ernest slightly intoxicated and took him to the Farnsworths, whom Allen said he knew. There was no one there, and, after waiting inside for a while, they walked down the street. As they passed a store Allen grabbed a coat from a dummy and ran away with it.

THE ARREST.

"Ernest walked quietly on somewhat dazed by the liquor Allen had given him. He was arrested at once and taken to the station, and Allen was caught a little later and also brought there. When Allen was arrested he said that he and Ernest had robbed the Farnsworth's House, although, mind you, nothing was taken away. My boy protested innocence, but the Farnsworths swore hard against him, and that, with Allen's confession, was too much, and both were taken to jail. That was about Christmas. Some time before I had received a letter from the young lady telling me all about her acquaintance with Ernest. She said her parents objected and asked me for my advice. I replied that if her parents were like me they were only seeking her good, and I advised her to do as they desired.

"She also wanted to know if she might call on me when she came back to spend the Christmas vacation, and I consented. She came here one day and told me all the story again. How much she thought of Ernest, how she intended to set him up in business, how she had often offered him money, which he always refused to take. I then told her that Ernest had been arrested. It was the first she had heard of it. She said she was helpless and could do nothing. She called again, though, and said she had hired a lawyer to defend Ernest, and she wanted me to tell him that if he were sent to jail not to fear, that she would think as much of him as ever. She then asked me to write her at the boarding school how the trial came out, and then went away.

A HEAVY SENTENCE.

"Ernest was advised to plead guilty, but he declared he would not plead guilty, and he did not, and was sentenced to four years. Allen's attorney got Allen a new trial, and he then received but one year in the Bridewell, but Ernest was unable to secure a new hearing of his case.

"I wrote to the young lady as I had agreed to do, but I don't think she got the letter. Her father heard that I had written her, however, and sent her away for a time. She came back last year and called on me. She spoke indignantly of Ernest's being in the penitentiary, and wanted me to write him of how much she thought of him, and how much she should help him when he got out. She said that she herself had been practically in a prison during her two years of absence.

"Some time last year an attorney was recommended to me by a woman as a man who could not be bought off. I went to him, and he said that he could assist me. He asked me if I had any letters as proofs. I told him I had, and mentioned those from the young lady. He said those were just what he wanted; that he had made the millionaire settle for two scrapes he had gotten into—one on Wabash avenue, and the other on Washington boulevard, and that by showing the letters to him, the father would immediately get Ernest pardoned out. I gave him the letters, and that was the last I saw of them."

FIRE IN THE HOLD.

Narrow Escape of a Pacific Mail Steamship From Destruction—A Stubborn Fight With the Flames That Lasted Nearly 24 Hours.

NEW YORK, August 24.—The Pacific Mail steamship City of Para, with 29 cabin passengers, arrived at Sandy Hook this morning from Aspinwall. The combings of her forward hatch burned and scorched, are the outward marks of a big fire which came very near destroying the vessel and a precious cargo. The Para left New York the first part of this month with a full cargo of merchandise. She reached Aspinwall in due season, and the 'longshoremen and sailors had discharged a total of 650 tons of cargo from the hold when fire was discovered among the cotton and naval stores which were stowed in the forward compartment.

This was on the evening of August 11, two days after the vessel's arrival. The fire had complete control of the forehold when discovered, and, before the alarm could be sounded, great sheets of flame and volumes of blinding smoke filled the air over the forward part of the craft. The flames attracted the attention of the ancient Fire Department of Aspinwall, which turned out, and, with a number of American laborers about the docks, set to work to assist the people of the steamship in extinguishing the flames. All through the night of the 11th the men toiled, several falling exhausted as morning came on from overwork.

The 12th opened with the fire still burning fiercely, and toward noon of that day it looked as if the steamer was doomed. During the afternoon of the 12th the flames went down as suddenly as they began, and at 4 o'clock Captain Lockwood, the skipper of the ship, reported the fire extinguished. A very considerable quantity of cargo was destroyed, and the interior of the vessel is badly damaged.

THAT BLOODY FEUD.

The Governor of Kentucky Appealed to for a Military Force—The Outlaws Must be Exterminated—A Plan for a Campaign.

LOUISVILLE, August 24.—Judge Robert Boyd, of the Fifteenth Judicial District, in which Harlan county is situated, came here to-day to request Governor Buckner to send troops to arrest Wilson Howard, leader of the band of outlaws that killed four citizens last Tuesday. Judge Boyd spoke in substance as follows:

I think that troops are necessary to capture the outlaws and their presence be essential at the criminal court in order that the law might be enforced. It is my plan to station officers at all the principal outlets of Harlan county and let them intercept all attempts to escape from the county. Then let the troops raid their fastnesses and either capture or drive them into the hands of those who guard the roads and other outlets. If Wilson Howard and Bail Jennings could be taken the trouble would end. But they are related to about one-fourth of the Harlan county inhabitants and have a large number of active supporters. Consequently it would be a hard matter to capture them without military support. Howard and Jennings offered to surrender to me and sent Harry Eversole to negotiate the conditions. They sent word they would surrender if they were assured bail would be allowed them, but I, of course, demanded an unconditional surrender.

I think the best thing to be done in case of capture would be to turn them over to the Missouri authorities as quickly as possible. They are both wanted in that State for two or three murders. They murdered a deaf mute in cold blood, and, I think, killed one or two persons afterward. Marshal Hunter came near capturing Howard some time since out in Rock Castle county. Howard, however, was warned before Captain Hunter reached the house, and made good his escape on a very swift horse. There are several rewards offered for their capture, but nothing like such a large sum as has been reported. I will continue to hold court as usual.

WILL TRY IT AGAIN.

A New Form of Bids Prepared for Building the Cruisers.

WASHINGTON, August 24—Advertisements were re-issued to-day from the Navy Department for bids for the construction of the three 2,000 ton cruisers for which excesive proposals were opened on Thursday. The new advertisements are the same as the old with certain important differences that are expected to induce contractors to offer bids that will fall within the appropriation. The department makes several concessions to this end. In the first place six months more time is given, making the contract period two and one-half years. The maximum speed to be obtained is fixed at 17 knots instead of 18, and the premium rate is altered.

There will be a premium of $25,000 for each quarter knot over the maximum and a similar deduction for each quarter knot below instead of $10,000 for the first quarter knot, $20,000 for the second, $30,000 for third, and $40,000 for fourth and all above. The minimum speed below which vessels will be rejected, is to 16 knots instead of 16½. The bids will be opened October 26. No action has yet been taken in the case of the two 3,000 ton vessels, but a re-advertisement will probably be issued for them.

BOTH CLAIM THE PLACE.

Two Men With One Name Want the Same Public Position.

WASHINGTON, August 24.—The Fourth Auditor of the Treasury has transmitted to the First Controller a letter received by him from Andrew J. Whitaker, of Carpentersville, Ill., in which the writer says he has seen in a Chicago newspaper a notice of his appointment as Deputy Fourth Auditor, and begs leave to accept the office, with thanks. Andrew J. Whitaker, of Illinois, was duly appointed to that office about two weeks ago, and a gentleman who claims to be from Illinois, although recently engaged in business here, appeared a week ago, qualified and began the discharge of the duties of Deputy Auditor. The Fourth Auditor has sent the letter of the second Andrew J. Withaker to the First Controller to determine who is entitled to the place.

AGAINST HIS WILL.

The Friends of Conybeare Are Endeavoring to Secure His Transfer

FROM THE JAIL IN LONDONDERRY.

Balfour's Gratuitous Insults a Piece of Plain Blackguardism.

QUEEN VICTORIA'S VISIT IN WALES.

She Becomes Quite Kittenish, and Speaks Welsh Just Like a Native.

As a result of so many Parnellite members of Parliament being absent when they could have easily defeated the Government by their presence, about 40 of them will be requested to remain at home hereafter altogether.

[BY CABLE TO THE DISPATCH.]

LONDON, August 24.—[Copyrighted.]—Parliament still drags its slow length along, but everything has been arranged for adjournment next Friday. Parnell is still very angry with that half of his party that, as was related in THE DISPATCH last Sunday, went grouse shooting on the day the season opened, and lost an opportunity to defeat the Government measure. It is now said, and generally believed, that about 40 of the present Parnellite members will not be seen in the House of Commons after the present session. These are the members who lack esprit du corps, and have even refused to obey their chieftain's whips, as on the occasion that has brought about their undoing. The Irish newspapers have denounced the laggards in the most furious terms, and there is little doubt that nearly half of the Irish party will be quietly asked to resign their seats, in view of the general election.

OUTRAGES STILL CONTINUE.

The outrages of English misrule in Irelend still continue. O'Brien and Gilhooly, who are now being tried at Clonakilty, are being prosecuted on evidence furnished by policemen who pretended to take down incendiary speeches in shorthand. Harrington, the M. P., who came near thrashing Balfour a fortnight ago, attended the trial to-day, to cross-examine one of these police reporters. Harrington gave the policeman a test, and found he was unable to follow the slowest possible speech. O'Brien, as most Americans know, is a very rapid speaker, and yet the witness swore that he had taken down O'Brien's speech in the open air, without table or any rest for his notebook, verbatim. In the presence of the Court Harrington then read a passage containing 127 words in 70 seconds, the policeman taking it down in shorthand. Twelve minutes were then given him to transcribe his notes, and it was found that he had omitted 66 out of the 127 words. And yet it is upon testimony such as this that Irish patriots are convicted, as O'Brien and Gilhooly are sure to be.

THE CONYBEARE CASE.

An effort was made in Parliament this week to secure the transfer of Conybeare from Londonderry jail to better quarters. Conybeare, who represents the division of Cornwall in Parliament, is undergoing a sentence of six months in the Londonderry jail for participating in the plan of campaign, of which he has served two months already. He has been afflicted with a loathsome disease, contracted in his cell, and he is covered with vermin. Still he will make no appeal for relief, and his colleagues in Parliament are obliged to interfere on his behalf, against his will. In the debate upon Conybeare's removal last evening, Balfour said, in response to questions from the Irish members, that he had no idea how Conybeare became covered with vermin, but he supposed that the last occupant of the cell must have left them on him. When Balfour was asked who was the last occupant of the cell, he responded, "Father McFadden," a piece of gratuitous blackguardism, since the jail has been and the martyr priest, who is a gentleman of high culture and breeding, was released in May. Balfour has promised, however, to have the jail inspected by a competent sanitary engineer.

Queen Victoria has gone down to Wales, undeterred by the threats of being hissed out of the country. Still, Her Majesty was not inclined to trust too much to the loyalty of the people, and she gave strict orders that all druids, bards and Taffies, who delight in being called Welshmen, should be excluded from the station at which she arrived, and she drove away in a closed carriage, so that none of her dutiful subjects should see her. But, notwithstanding all this, they did cheer her, and Tom Gee, of Deubigh, who was to have started the hissing of Victoria, was nowhere to be found when the critical moment arrived. Consequently, the head of the church of Old England has not yet been deposed, and probably it was in a spirit of thankfulness at this mercy vouchsafed to her that when a deputation of farmers presented her with a walking stick. Moreover, she spoke this barbarous language like a genuine Welshman, so that Tom Gee's followers are rapidly being converted to enthusiastic loyalists.

Victoria to-day is perfectly kittenish. She has for hours disported herself on the lawn, sending Welsh sheep dogs to find lost sheep, and these carefully trained animals invariably found and drove the fleecy ones over hedges and ditches, until they stood frightened and baaing at the Queen's feet. The tithes question, however, is still agitating all Wales.

The parsons have rounded on the Government for having failed to put their bill through and, when your friends turn upon you, it is indeed bitter, and the dissenters are incensed because disestablishment in Wales is not yet an established fact, so much so, indeed, that at a meeting of Congregationalists in Wales this week, a small minority made an attempt to censure Gladstone for not having voted for the motion when it came on in the House of Commons.

Little Wales threatens to become an unpleasant thorn in England's side.
