Poetical.

MY DOCTOR'S SPECIFIC.

My Doctor is a grave and portly man,
And, like himself, his words all carry weight;
He has a cane that helps him all it can,
And, at his nose, seems Minister of State,
I said good morning ,Doctor! I am ill,
But ere my own disorders I rehearse,
I must prescribe for you—not lance or pill—
But some of my spondulics for your purse.

The Doctor, when he took this awkward dose,
Looked pale—as one committing a great sin;
But crimsoned up—as Starvant or Vose
When "ile" flows out, and spondulikes in.
He asked me What's the matter? I replied
Bad stomach, languid liver—more the latter.
"Your pulse—I see—a freight of lilies shied
Into your purse, eh—Eh? That's what's the matter."

The Doctor said—and looked so very grave
My ears reached out to hear each word he said—
He said You're slightly troubled with the knave,
A malady quite common in the head:
Brandy and water hot, I thought, for that—
"The head in water, iced" he said again;
But Doctor! give besides, I'll tell you what,
A plaster of spondulics on the brain.

He said "'Tis true"—with such an air of thought
I knew that truth was good for man to hear—
'Tis true that panacea, were it caught,
Would take like Wickliffe—or Ruth's lager beer.
Twere grandly said, "The famous Doctor Brass"
Has found at last the universal cure,
For wit, drone, scholar, as for laboring ass—
For men refined, as for the common boor.

Spondulics for all maladies to-wit;
Then what apothecaries keep the drug?
Aye, there's the rub—but I will come at it.
The sceptre-can alighted from the mug—
It came down like a stick, the rocket spent.
"Good sir, you've gored your liver with false pride,
We shall apply, as counter-irritant,
A blister of spondulics on your side."

The Doctor subtler grew. "You hear," said he,
"The kiting complications, and worse ills,
Of those Pneumatic lords—that are to be;
I'll order every one spondulic pills:
'Twill work; freed munies will need a Bureau then—
The model freedmen's, too, about to drop—
U. Brass, M. D., will join it—only when Apothecary Iricia opens shop."

The learned Holpin, veterinary king,
Treats bilious incidents to go to law,
With—see Green's case, of Morgans whisky ring,
Solution of spondulics for the jaw.
But my good Doctor, a grave, portly man
Whose cane makes ornate his sublime, old nags,
Will vend all cures upon his own great plan,
When Irwin, pharmacien, starts the drug.

JOHNNY'S LESSON.

Johnny, come here, and look at the cat!
Notice how nicely she washes her face;
Now rubbing this cheek, now rubbing that,
Carefully putting each hair in its place.
Johnny, you dear, little dirty elf,
Don't you feel a little ashamed of yourself?

Her hands she takes next—now, Johnny, look there!
Carefully—daintily—see her scrub!
Now she arranges her soft, silken hair,
And her tail and her ears have an extra rub.
She owns neither looking-glass, towel nor comb,
Yet she keeps herself neat, abroad and at home.

Johnny, what do you think of this?
With that smile on your bright, little, smutty face;
I declare there's not a spot I can kiss!
And you know that your hair is never in place.
No wonder your hands in your pockets go!
You're ashamed of them, Johnny! you are, you know!

Playing with marbles down on your knees,
Grubbing the angle worms under the ground,
Riding the fences and climbing the trees
You're the dirtiest fellow anywhere round.
You know you are, Johnny; you need not look hurt!
You know you delight to play in the dirt.

O, Johnny! O, Johnny! what shall I do.
Is a question that puzzles me evening and morn;
With a dear, loving, little fellow like you,
Who is always dirty, and tumbled and torn.
Johnny, if you don't do better than that,
I believe I shall send you to school to the cat!

WEE COLD—WEE COLD—WEAK OLD.

For a combination of pathos and humor, the following from the Norwich, (Conn.) Advertiser, purporting to be the wail of a father over his buried boy, is, to say the least peculiar:

Close nestled in his mother's arms,
His cheeks as red as roses,
With eyes of Heaven's bluest blue,
And smilliest of noses—
Close nestled in his mother's arms,
My weekold boy reposes.

Fast mouldering on the hillside green,
Where myrtles bloom, and roses,
His baby brother sleeps I ween—
No arm his form encloses—
Fast mouldering on his hillside green,
My weekold boy reposes.

Sweet slumberer in loving arms—
Dear dreamer 'neath the roses—
May Fate keep from all alarms
Rest when this burst life closes—
When, mouldering on the hillside green,
This weak old boy reposes.

SYLVIA.

Oh, fly, my heart, to Sylvia fly;
And tell her that I pine—I die—
That every breath is but a sigh
Of grief—of pain—for love's desires.
Oh! tell her that so fondly shrined
Within my heart her image kind,
To all beside my soul is blind,
And love consumes me with its fires.

Oh! tell dear Sylvia that my brain
Awakes to life and hope again,
And thoughts that long have dormant lain,
Come rushing at a headlong pace.
Oh say, my heart, that she alone
Has taught thee secrets long unknown,
And all my soul to her has flown—
The queen of beauty, love and grace.

Return, my heart, from Sylvia's arms,
And say responsive love alarms
Her breast—so fair from virgin charms,
And bids me to her bosom fly.
My passion knows no purer bliss—
No love—no other—but this;
One hour of heaven in Sylvia's kiss—
One warm embrace of love—then die.
