THINGS OF BEAUTY.

Dame Fashion's Pleasing Mandates for the Present Month.

New Fabrics and Designs--Bewitching Variations in Bonnets. Hats, Feathers, and Flowers--Colors Still More Brilliant.

[New York Herald.]

The fickle goddess is in despair at the unkindness displayed toward her this spring by the capricious clerk of the weather. Jealous of the beautiful tints that she has borrowed from his rainbow factory, he will not give her votaries an opportunity to array themselves in the brilliant hues which she has prepared as Easter offerings for her worshippers. Fortunately the conclusion of the forty days of Lenten restriction brings Easter Sunday this year in the middle of April, and the mild temperature in which spring bonnets flourish may be by that time vouchsafed to those who impatiently wait for an opportunity to don their new garments. The merchants are also somewhat alarmed, for the extensive sales anticipated from increasing prosperity throughout the country, and the fact that so large a portion of the proceeds of a prosperous business season falls into their hands, have been seriously interfered with by the wintry weather.

The colorings of new fabrics are if possible more exquisite than ever before. The introduction of ombré or shaded effects is a conspicuous feature of this season's materials for millinery and dress goods. The reigning colors—excepting steel—are modified with yellow in the same manner that an artist will, with a dash of cadmium yellow, warm every color on his palette. Blues are of the turquoise or robin's egg tint, brown is of a golden shade, pink is of the coral or even salmon tint, red of scarlet, capucine or Vandyke tone, and even white is tinted with ivory, cream, or the original color of the silk cocoon. Purple is modified with red rather than blue, and green, with the exception of myrtle, is of the warm olive tones. Yellow, itself of the moutarde tint, forms the predominating hue of many of the parti-colored striped and plaid goods. In the ombré effects are manufactured ribbons, silks, and woollen fabrics; but this is not always the entire design for the introduction of color; but a shaded stripe is sometimes placed among the colors of the vertical and bayadere striped fabrics. Ribbons, often of a solid color with an ombré border or an alternate ombré and flat tint, are used in bayadere or vertical stripes. Silks for parts of costumes or millinery are shaded with the darkest tints at each edge or in the centre, or are darkest on one edge with the lighter colors running to the other selvedge.

HOW THE NEW FABRICS ARE USED.

These do not form the entire suit or bonnet, but are in dress goods combined with the same material in plain colors, matching exactly either the solid color or lightest or darkest tint in the shading. The plain goods are not discarded for entire suits, and the soft and beautiful coaching colors are in as high favor as they were last season. The darker, neutral tints of tan, blue, olive, bronze, and myrtle green, though apparently dark for spring and summer wear, are very becoming to sun browned faces, and will be extensively used in the nun's veiling that has taken the place of bunting in a great degree; and with these dark colors will be used primrose, cream, or other light tints of the same goods, or pongee silk, or they will be combined with the striped, plaid, or figured chené silks. Silk and satin surah form the foundation of many handsome costumes for promenade, reception, or dinner dresses. Black brocades of silk and grenadine brocaded with velvet are used with these silks. The grenadines of this class of goods include all colors and designs in stripes and plaids, and form the garniture of some of the handsomest costumes of this season's importation, and are among the richest of the new goods. Velvet comprises portions of some costumes prepared for summer wear, but is not extensively used. Lace buntings are to be seen in great variety for less expensive dresses. For street suits, to be used for shopping, park rambles, or other occasions where utility is demanded rather than beauty, the cheviot plaids and mixed checks are most suitable materials. These are of both English and French manufacture; the English goods being of a lighter texture, but otherwise resembling gentlemen's suitings. Heather mixed tweeds of silk and wool, in dark effects produced by the mixture of what was once wittily called the four seasons—pepper, salt, mustard, and vinegar—are made with basque and slightly-trimmed skirt, embellished only with rows of stitching and fancy buttons. In addition to the materials already mentioned, the standard light cashmere, camel's-hair, momie cloth, Yeddo cloth (a fabric with fine crape-like texture), silk-and-wool tabbinet, and alligator cloth are to be worn; the striped and plaid goods in house or street costumes. Some of these have borders, to be used as trimmings. Korrigane and other robes, with eight yards of plain bourette and three yards of striped fur trimming, have been imported by some leading houses, and promise to become favorites. They are put up in boxes, are of fine texture, and the newest colors and designs. In some the only trimming is a scarf for neck-trimming and a sash with fringed ends for the skirt.

CHANGES IN DRESS DESIGNS.

The only change made in the manner of making up dress materials is in the introduction of baggy effects in skirt and sleeve draperies and in the back of some of the newest wraps. Basques are short and generally pointed in front, with the back cut in fanciful design or continued to the slightly bouffant drapery of the skirt. In some cases the front is a simulated Jersey bodice with the invisible fastening at the back, which is finished as a basque. The skirt is trimmed, wherever opportunity offers, with flowers, plaited or shirred, and shirring is introduced in the plain materials in a greater degree than ever before. Waists of soft fabrics have shirred yokes or shoulder seams, with the loose waist starred to fit the form. The front breadth of some of the newest costumes is also gathered in deep shirring; the loose drapery falling below is gathered loosely into the skirt-trimming just above the knees with a baggy but not ungraceful effect. In one of the most beautiful imported costumes of amber cashmere and satin shown at a recent opening this drapery was of cashmere and turned back, the satin lining being caught up under the basque at the back. Polonaises are draped differently at each side, and skirts are often trimmed in the same manner, with the back breadths arranged as they were last season, the edges of short skirts being finished with box-plaitings, having knife-plaitings in the centre, with ruffles, &c. Sleeves are larger at the wrist and are often cut very wide and gathered into a medium size by shirrings. The upper part is often entirely of fine shirring or shirred small puffs running around the arm or from the shoulder to the elbow. Large puffs at the shoulder are seen on a few imported dresses, but these are suitable only to slender figures with sloping shoulders, as the puffs make the shoulders appear higher and broader. Neck-trimmings are full ruchings, ruffles, or plaitings. The neck-trimming usually extends to the point of the basque, the front being finished with shirred satin, &c. Wide sailor and round collars will continue to be worn. The heart-shaped bodice is a favorite design for dinner dresses, and is usually filled in with lace. Though self-trimmings are the rule, with the occasional addition of rainbow beaded passementeries, black and steel-colored cashmeres are loaded with jet and steel embroideries and fringes. Ombré effects are seen in some of the newest designs in fringes and colored passementeries. The edges of basques are sometimes finished with these, Black Spanish lace is extensively used on black costumes, either of silk, surah, brocade, or grenadine. Tinsel of gold, silver, and steel is introduced in many of the new dress goods and trimmings.

NEW COSTUMES, TEA GOWNS AND WRAPS.

For a costume of Vandyke red and ombré surah the vest front of the basque of plain material is of the ombré silk, closely shirred and finished with a ruffle at each side. The front breadth of the skirt is shirred under the basque, and extends to the knee, where it falls over a row of shirring extending around the front of the skirt. Ombré silk shirred one side mingles with the back draperies. On the other it is draped toward the train, and is shirred at intervals, the fringed end falling gracefully over a puff of plain silk. One half of the width of ombré silk is shirred for a flounce at the edge of the skirt, over a plaiting of the plain surah.

A tea-rose-tinted dress of cashmere and surah silk has the Jersey fitting silk waist and entire top of skirt shirred closely. Drapery of the cashmere and bayadere striped silk are mingled at the back, and alternate shirrings of tea-rose, surah, and striped silk flounces trim the lower part of the skirt and are mingled with the drapery of the train.

A black silk short dress of rich quality is made with a simple basque and skirt, kilt-plaited from the left. The back drapery is slightly bouffant. A scarf of silk begins at the waist on the right side and is finished low on the back drapery with a bow and end. This sash is trimmed at each edge with handsome jet-embroidered passementerie, and the end is edged with heavy jet fringe. A wide collar of design matching the sash-trimming, with a mouchoir pocket and sleeve ornaments, form the only trimming of the basque. A shoulder cape, to be worn with this, is trimmed with the passementerie and fringe matching the sash.

A black costume of surah satin and velvet has a Louis Quinze habit of velvet, the vest being of satin. The front of the skirt, plaited with wide Spanish lace falling over each edge, shirred flounce and sides, finish the skirt. The basque is edged with steel and jet embroidered lace. A shoulder-cape of velvet is to be worn with this.

A tea gown of primrose-tinted surah silk has the long train caught up at the end and mingled with the drapery of the princess-shaped back. The loose fronts with which these gowns are always made are trimmed with cascades of creamy coral lace, over which are tied white ribbon strings at intervals. Shirred neck and sleeves mingled with lace complete the gown.

The most recherché wraps are of white or black Spanish lace half fitted to the form at the back, with loose fronts of lace or brocaded silk. They have sleeves and two deep flounces of the same lace, and are lined with colored satin. Pelisses, with shirred shoulders, waists, and sleeves, shoulder-capes of shirred silk, and mantles made half fitting by shirring at the waist, are the newest variations in outside garments. Shoulder-capes made of the trimming of the cashmere are used in the shape of wide scarfs, collars, loose capes, and fichus.

MILLINERY AND ITS VARIATIONS.

Large and small bonnets are equally popular this season. The large Leghorn flats and Panama hats are bent and cut into all sorts of fanciful shapes, forming the poke, sailor, or cottage bonnet, as the taste of the wearer suggests. This manner of shaping hats is preferred to having them shaped on the block, as a greater variety is in this manner attained and an individuality given to each. Black and other straws are seen in turban and English walking shapes. Crowns of fancy Neapolitan, Tuscan, and other braids of silk, net, lace, beads, &c., are inserted in many hats of Leghorn or other straw. Rough-and-ready coarse straw large hats are made in all colors, for serviceable street or out-of-town wear. Black French chip bonnets will continue to be worn for half-mourning and by many who prefer this fine smooth straw to the newer and more elaborate ones. Ostrich plumes and tips will be the trimming for large hats, mingled with ribbons and flowers, and on the smaller ones will be used flowers and lace, with pompons and small tips. These will be combined with lace, straws, beaded-fringes, &c. Steel is universally used in millinery, even for half mourning. Small combs replace the long hair-pins of last season, and turtles, spiders, with small reptiles, owls' heads, and all kinds of Egyptian designs, are the fancies most in vogue for fastening bows of lace, ribbon, &c. Small pearl, steel and jet-headed pins are stuck in half a dozen conspicuous places on some of the new bonnets, and steel or jet buttons are mingled with the other trimmings. For ribbons and silks the ombré effects are most used. Plaids and stripes also appear. Wide ribbons have their plain surface sometimes varied with corded or fringed edges, the latter of a different color from the body of the ribbon. Tulle, with dots of chenille, varying from a pin's head to an inch in diameter, and plain net, with ombré coloring, will be extensively worn for strings and for mixing with flowers. Crape and mongelié—a new crape-like material—will be worn later in the season. The pretty muff matching the bonnet last winter has now given place to the Kaminski compocher, a pocket to be attached to the belt of street or house costume. A fan trimmed to correspond with the bonnet is also a new Parisian fancy.

INTERESTING TO THEATRE-GOERS.

The smaller of the new bonnets are mostly of capote or Fanchon style, slightly larger than those of last season, and have been generally adopted by the majority of ladies as theatre bonnets on account of their resembling a headdress more than an actual bonnet for protection from the elements, and because they are less obstructive to the view of others. The French ladies do not wear the poke-bonnet on the back of the head as many Americans do, but projecting over the face. A feature of some of the prettiest bonnets is the continuation of the profuse flower garniture and fastening at the throat. Lace-bows and lace falling forward, half-concealing the flowers, are also among the novelties.

GEMS OF HEADWARE.

One of the most charming of the new large hats is a Tuscan straw of the genuine Bloomer shape, so well known to the last generation. Two rows of plaited vermicelli lace finish the inside of the wide brim. Around the crown is arranged wide white satin ribbon, with a bow of fringed ends on the left side of the front and a square bow with long streamers at the middle of the back. A long white plume curls gracefully from the left side down the back.

For a jockey shape of Tuscan straw the high round crown is surrounded with heavy steel cord knotted on the right side. The brim is turned up on the left, and trimmed with a large bow of white plaid ribbon and a plume fastened with two steel arrows. The rolled brim is covered with steel lace over silk of the same color.

A capote of horseshoe shape has a steel lace crown, with the brim and inside edge of shirred ruby velvet, in which are about a dozen small steel ball pins at intervals. A ruby shaded pompon finishes the left side, and ruby ombré satin, eight inches wide, shading from pink to deepest red, is used for strings.

A capote of swan's down is trimmed only with a straight bow of garnet velvet at the back, finished with handsome steel ornament. The face of this is finished with vermicelli lace, and the wide strings are of the same material, with satin strings of ribbon inside.

The abbot, a small cottage bonnet, has a pearl beaded lace crown, with fringe of large pearl beads at the edge. Three rows of large beads edge the front of the brim. A white satin bow on the left side is finished with a pearl bead butterfly.

The forster is of corn-colored silk near the face, with open straw crown over orange-silk. A large bunch of crushed tea-roses trims the left side, and ombré net, of orange shading to corn-color, covers the roses on the upper part of the bonnet and continues down the sides, forming the strings. Fringe of ripened oats is at the back and on the right side the lace is fastened with steel pins.

ROSES AND CARDINAL SHADES.

A small poke formed from a flat of black straw is trimmed with black and old-gold lace, with a bunch of black tips on one side and flowers on the other. The black lace strings are fastened at the point with loops and ends of satin ribbon and a bunch of flowers. The mouchoir pocket belonging to this is of black satin, trimmed with flowers, ribbon and lace, matching that on the bonnet.

The Bertha is a distingué large poke bent into that shape from a plain round hat of fine black French chip. The crown is surrounded by a brocaded silk, with richly-colored embroidered roses and shaded cardinal surah. A bunch of black tips finish the left and a bunch of silk roses the right side. The strings are of shaded red ribbons. A fan of black, trimmed with flowers and ribbon, accompanied this bonnet.

A regular old-style poke, with square crown nearly five inches deep, is trimmed with large bows of plaid ribbon of delicate tints, mingled with plaitings of Breton lace. This also forms the face trimming, and it is worn without strings. The effect is quaint, and not unbecoming to a young and pretty face.

A rough-and-ready large hat of black is faced with black velvet. On each side of the round crown are long black ostrich plumes, and three shorter ones form the trimming of the front and curl over the brim. This is similar to the trimming on some of the favorite beaver hats of last winter.

The mixed-straw sailor hats will be worn by children for school hats. The Gypsy, sailor, and close caps of Leghorn or other white straw, are trimmed with lace and narrow ribbons and small colored tips and pompons mixed with small and delicately-tinted flowers, as daisies, forget-me-nots, &c.

RICHMOND, April 14, 1881.

Editors Dispatch: Noticing in your issue of to-day two communications in regard to "Mainspring's" question, I would suggest to "C. H." that if he place an axle in the outer wheel so arranged with a clutch as to allow of but one revolution of the wheel on the axle, and then hold this axle in his hand without allowing it to twist, while he causes the outer wheel to revolve around the inner, he will find that when the clutch catches the outer wheel will have gone but half way around the inner.

To "J. M. P." I would suggest that the question is to cause the outer wheel to revolve around an inner wheel, and not along a straight line. R.

DRUGS, MEDICINES, &c.

VEST-POCKET CURE

FOR DYSPEPSIA.

Bishop D. S. DOGGETT, Southern Methodist: It is an excellent corrective of Indigestion, have used it with prompt beneficial results.

Rev. Dr. MANGUM, Professor University of North Carolina: I concur with Bishop Doggett in his estimate of the Vest-Pocket Cure.

Rev. B. F. WOODWARD, Presiding Elder Virginia Conference: About twelve years I suffered from Dyspepsia. Failing in with this remedy I gave it a fair trial. After its use I could eat anything with impunity. I am sure I am indebted to this medicine for what of health and physical comfort I have had for the last sixteen years. I have known many since to be relieved by its use.

Rev. Dr. DABNEY, Theological Seminary, Virginia: It is highly esteemed here by the regular Medical Faculty and the people. It is excellent for Indigestion and Flatulent Colic—sedative, soporific, tonic, slightly aperient, without nausea. R. L. DABNEY, Hampden-Sidney College.

Rev. LEROY M. LEE, D. D., Methodist Historian: I am never without it at home or abroad. It is an antidote to Indigestion. Uneasiness after a meal or purging is checked and the bowels regulated. Its merits are attested by numbers of high character. I have seen a tried-every-thing-dyspeptic of fifteen years relieved by one dose.

Editor Richmond Christian Advocate: This remedy is of tried virtue. I have seen Dyspepsia cured completely by it. It seems to be an antidote to our "national disease."

IN THE MIDST OF LIFE IS DEATH!

With such a warning before us, let us at least be prepared to contest the point before "we shuffle off this mortal coil," and we can only be strengthened in our defence by full supply of this invaluable medicine, which while moving the bowels very gently, purges the whole system. The bowels form but one of the natural outlets for the removal of waste matter and impurities; the kidneys draw away one species of waste matter in the form of water, and the skin another species in the form of vapor and perspiration.

ALL the organs must be stimulated to increased but natural action, and thus the whole system, even to the blood, the very life of the body, is cleansed and made healthy. BE IT REMEMBERED THAT SIMMONS HEPATIC COMPOUND, OR LIVER-CURE NEVER FAILS. ap 5 9,12&16
