Modified Bertillon For Pretty School Marms

'Tis the Tale of a Man with an Envious Job; Gets Stacks of Pictures of Lovely Women Seeking Opportunity to Train the Youth; Some Helpful Don'ts When Posing

On the desk of School Superintendent C. F. Philbrook, at the Central School building yesterday when a Review reporter called, was a stack of neatly written letters written in a feminine hand and attached to each letter was a small photo. In each file with the letter was also a filled in information blank, giving detailed information about the photographed person.

Professor Philbrook has not, as one may guess, entered the secret service and the persons whose photos are attached to the letters are not "wanted" in the secret service use of that word. So, it is not a rogue's gallery but on the contrary a gallery of very beautiful young women school teachers, who have applied to the board of school trustees for positions in the district schools.

"Teachers are seldom ever employed now," said Professor Philbrook, "on the strength of written words of recommendation or information. It is the rule these days to require applicants to send their photographs along with their application, so that we may compare the character lines or lack of lines in their faces with what they write regarding themselves. We also use the pictures to determine whether or not the applicant is neat in his or her personal appearance, which is a very important qualification in a school teacher these days."

"But everybody, especially women, dress up to have their pictures taken," was suggested to the superintendent.

"Yes, I know that and we have to discount that in determining whether the applicant is neat in her personal appearance," he said.

"Now here is one that I rather like," said the professor, picking up the letter and picture of a young woman in whose face there were unmistakable indications of strength of character.

The system of teacher employment now in use is the same principle as the Bertillion system of determining character that is used by nearly all police departments and detective bureaus of the country. It was invented by a famous French criminologist. While employers of teachers seek to determine character in the face, Bertillion experts carry it further and read the finger prints and other natural and physical evidences.

Criminologists have to be more careful than employers of teachers, so they carry the study of character further. It is truer perhaps than the average person realizes that one's character may be read in the face. On meeting a person we unconsciously determine there and then that we do or do not like the person and this liking or disliking is based on the fleeting glimpse of a face. This human truth is preserved in a famous couplet by an old English author:

I do not like thee Doctor Fell,
The reason why I can not tell;
But this I know and know full well,
I do not like thee Doctor Fell.

The teachers' employment agencies which have introduced this system of employing teachers, have merely made practical use of the faculty, more keenly developed in some than in others, of reading character in the face.

Study of the advantages of this system makes its advantages obvious. On going over applications the employer asks himself if the person whose picture is shown attached to the application, is likely to measure up to the qualifications stated in the application. If he applicant possesses those qualifications or if they are the result of conceit, vanity, over-confidence or other traits that trick humans into egotistical self praise.

In the case of applications by women, the picture is more important than in the consideration of applications of men for positions in schools, indeed, it is doubtful if the system would ever have been adopted but for the fact that women are in the majority in the tutoring profession. Is an applicant for a position as teacher fussily dressed? If so, the employer concludes that she perhaps devotes too much time to frills and fluffy ruffles than to her profession.

Does a doll face show dimples crinkling, ruddy cheeks and eyes set in a cunning trap to catch the unwary, in the basket goes the application. Not that employers of teachers are killjoys, for the spreading of joy along with learning is one of the qualifications demanded of a good teacher, but that teaching is a serious profession and only those earnestly following the profession are wanted.

In the case of male applicants, school trustees would never employ a young man whose picture showed a cigarette tilted saucily from the left-hand corner of the mouth, nor do school trustees want a man who wears his hat on the nape of his neck for that, say criminologists, indicates lack of seriousness and stability and lack of power of application.

"Oh that mine enemy would write a book" exclaimed someone who had it in for his neighbor. But to get the real dope, a la Sherlock Holmes, he should have secured his photograph. The last word in the fine work of reading character will have been spoken if, as a modern scientist claims he is able to do, it becomes possible to photograph the soul.

VALUATIONS MUST BE EQUALIZED SAYS SEN. SIMS

Material Difference in Assessment of Mines by Supervisors Causes Protest

A storm of protest is brewing since it was published in the Review that the board of supervisors of Yavapai county had assessed the patented producing mines of that county at fifty per cent and the same class of mines in this county were assessed at eighty per cent and at that the Cochise county board of supervisors had made a reduction of twenty per cent from the valuation ordered made by the state tax commission.

"I do not believe that the Yavapai valuation should be allowed to stand," said Senator W. P. Sims to a Review reporter yesterday afternoon. "It certainly is a discrimination against the mining industry of this county. If eighty per cent is a fair valuation of that class of mines in Cochise county the Yavapai assessed valuation is thirty per cent too low."

Asked if he thought that the valuations should be equalized, the senator replied that "they must be equalized" and stated that the people of Cochise should see to it that they were equalized.

CUPID BALKS AT INSTALMENT PLAN CEREMONY

Negro Very Much in Love Wanted to Pay Dollar Down and Dollar Week for Wedding

Judge Morris High says that he has in his career as a magistrate, married people on credit but that yesterday was the first time in his life that he was ever asked to procure a marriage license and perform the ceremony on the instalment plan. The bashful swain in this case was a negro, who said that he only had two dollars and that he desired to get married. Instee married couples will probably suspect at this that the applicant for a license was a high financier disguised as a negro but he wasn't. He was a terribly in earnest negro.

When he was informed that three dollars was the price of a marriage license, he asked the judge if the matter could not be arranged so that he might pay a dollar down and a dollar a week until the obligation was wiped out and that the usual fee given a justice for performing the wedding ceremony was five dollars, he was crestfallen.

"I've got er friend at Douglas what says he got married on two dollars," the negro said and the judge advised him to go to Douglas warning him, however, that cheap marriages were seldom good ones.

INJUNCTION FOR COUNTY REDISTRICTING?

Rumor that Supervisors May Be Subject of Court Order; McClay for Judge

It is reported that H. S. McClay, clerk of the board of supervisors, has been agreed upon by the board of supervisors as their appointee for justice of the peace of the Douglas precinct and that at Douglas his appointment is conceded. The report does not state who will be his successor as clerk of the board.

It was also reported that the board of supervisors of the county would be the defendant in an injunction proceeding to be brought by those interested in having the redistricting of the county deferred, as it is reported will be done in this county, until January 1915, but none of these would admit that such a movement was on foot.
