ARGOT OF CROOKS BARED TO POLICE IN SLANG PRIMER

NEW YORK, July 4.—What with Billy Sunday's sermons verbatim filling the newspapers and the latest issue of the Police Bulletin—the monthly publication of the police department—devoting its columns to a dissertation on "Criminal Slang"—that shows that the folks at the other extreme from Billy's congregations also don't give a darn for Barrett Wendell, it's beginning to look as if the town had put the rollers under the whole English language.

One gathers, in fact, after reading the piece about underworld slang in the Police Bulletin, that the only place left where one can hear the language spoken in all its pristine purity is up around the Harvard Club from 4 o'clock in the morning on, or after Jack Dunston has eased the high sign toward Captain of Waiters Moran and Privy Counselor Murphy to put skid chains on the younger set from dear old Harvard and send them back en masse to the jolly old club house.

"Bulletin" Is Apologetic.

And the police department seems sore as the deuce about this tendency of the underworld to manhandle a glorious linguistic heritage. The Bulletin even apologizes after a fashion for listing a lot of bloody words and phrases used by the roughnecks, such as calling bad whisky "coffin varnish," a lodging house a "kipp," and an empty safe a "bloomer"—the last an especially idiotic absurdity, inasmuch as the perfectly good word bloomer, or bloomers, is a thoughtful symbol which brings to mind anything but an idea of emptiness. A safe may be empty and bloomers may be perfectly safe, and all that sort of thing, but the police naturally are puzzled when it comes to a process of mind which selects the word bloomers to suggest an unoccupied inclosure of any kind.

"While the police department does not give official sanction to the use of this vocabulary," apologizes the piece about "Criminal Slang" in the Bulletin, after listing a hunk of slang expressions now in use among the boys of the avenue and their lady friends, "it is mindful of the fact that the members of the force are in close touch with characters who limit themselves to its use and a reading will no doubt prove of interest."

One has scarcely begun to give the Bulletin's brief list of slang words and their Harvard equivalents the once over and the up and down when it becomes evident that the dips and yeggs, or, as the Police Bulletin says slangily, "the denizens of the underworld," have no respect for even the most impressive solemnities of society.

"A Cold Meat Party."

Take, for instance, so impressive a function as a wake; an educated cop would call such an affair either a "function" or a "domestic calamity" of something equally classy. But not the yeggs and gunmen. Painfully the Police Bulletin explains that the roughneck guys so far forget themselves as to refer to a wake as "a bad meat party."

Here's the tabloid dictionary of the John J. Roughnecks as compiled "from various sources," so the Bulletin says, said sources, being cops who actually got near enough to a crook to hear him talk:

A Title Taper—One who raises money on forged deeds.

A Flying Jib—A talkative intoxicated person. (The Bulletin means, no doubt, a noisy souse.)

A Cold Meat Party——A wake.
Anchor—A stay of execution.
A Valentine—A short term sentence.
A Moll Buzzer—A thief who steals from women only.
A Gun Moll—A woman thief.
Bunger—A discolored eye.
Bloomers—Empty safes.
A Board Stiff—A walking advertisement.
Buzzer—A mean person.
Cannon—A pistol.
Coffin Varnish—Bad whisky.
Chuck—Food.
Croaker—A doctor.
Daisies—Boots.
Damper Getter—Thieves who rob from money drawers.
Front—Watch and chain.
Fallback—A friend in need.
Fill In—To become one of a party.
Gopher—A safe.
Heeled—Either to be armed or to have plenty of money.
Kipp—Lodging house or home.
Lam—To run.
Pad Money—Money used for lodgings.
Peter Man or Box Man—A safe blower.
Roust—To postle.
A Stone Getter—A thief who steals diamonds.
Stick and Slug—Keep together and fight.
Spill—Railroad terminal.
Scratcher—A forger.

May Get Out a Primer.

There was talk last night in educational circles of using this list to get out an "English As She Is Spoke" primer for the use of the great ethical middle class, which on the one hand does not go in much for modern revivals and on the other hand hasn't sunk to the crime depths and therefore does not always understand what is being said while eavesdropping on the Van Cortlandt Park subway trains after services or strolling along the favorite promenades of the boys of the avenue.

A sample page of the proposed primer, which may or may not be distributed in the elementary classes of of the schools, was run off in proof last night and may or may not be submitted at the next meeting of the board of education. The study of history is artfully combined with the study of modern English in the sample page of the primer, which runs:

"Did Will-i-am Jenn-ings Bry-an fill in? Well, yes and no. Did he lam for Pres-i-dent? Yes, he sure did. Three times he lammed. What did he get? Three times a bunger. Who slipped them to him? A land filled with buzzers. What else did they give to him? They gave him the daisies. Why did he lam? You can search me. What hap-pen-ed e-lec-tion night? A cold meat party. Did he have a fallback? Not on your life. Has he got a kipp? Sure—one out West, one down South and some be-tween. Then he's well heeled? You said a pageful, kid. Does he carry a cannon? No, but he ought to. Does he think we should stick and slug? Don't make me laugh. What is he now? He's a board stiff."

The only statement in the Bulletin's whole article that is an open question is the remark, quoted above, that "the members of the force are in close touch," with all the lads who developed the vocabulary under discussion.
