Town Branch Goes in Hiding

CHARLES TOWN, W. Va., Dec. 30.—Evitt's creek, known in Colonial nomenclature as "Evat's Run," which drains a part of this town, has abruptly disappeared about two miles from here.

Some time within the past year the stream, similarly disappeared at a point nearer its source, but a few cartloads of stone thrown into the opening on the side of the bank which caught the silt served to dam it and the stream resumed its normal passage to the Shenadoah river. But recently another opening appeared on the bankside farther down the stream, the water turned aside and the stream bed for some distance was as dry as though water had never passed over it.
