"Gen. Grant never has been defeated, and he never will be."—HORACE GREELEY.

While asserting the right of every Republican to his untrammeled choice of a candidate for next President until a nomination is made, I venture to suggest that Gen. Grant will be far better qualified for that momentous trust in 1872 than he was in 1868."—HORACE GREELEY, Speech on 5th January, 1871.

THE last county in Pennsylvania to have been heard from officially, and HARTRANFT's majority is 35,542.

MRS. LUCINA BROWN, widow of ex-Judge JAMES H. BROWN, of Kanawha, died on the 15th inst. She was daughter of the late Frederick G. L. BRUNNER, of Cabell county, and was in her 48th year. She was educated under the care of Rev. Dr. BEATTY, at the Female Seminary at Steubenville, and graduated with distinguished honors in 1841.

THE New York correspondent of the Boston Transcript writes:

Lincoln's voice is of itself a marvel. It is as though her very soul poured itself out in song, and the tool of melody that bursts its bonds would seemingly soften stones.

We should think from the above that its more immediate effect is to "soften" heads.

MR. JAMES ANTHONY FROUDE, the English historian, has come to the United States to deliver a series of lectures on the political relations of England and Ireland. He designs to show, if he can, that the misfortunes of Ireland are due rather to certain peculiarities of the race than to the oppressions of their conquerers, and that the sympathies of this country in behalf of Ireland against England have been misplaced. While Irishmen may not accept the views of any Englishman as a correct or impartial explanation of the misfortunes and discontents of their country, all will agree that the observations and opinions of such a man as FROUDE are worth the attention of the intelligent reader. The first lecture of the series proposed by him was delivered in New York, Wednesday evening, and a synopsis of it is copied in this paper.

A CAREFUL count of the Liberal Republican voters of Indiana, made by the State Committee a few days before the election, shows that they went in the election with 9,800 Republican votes sure for Hendricks. This should have made 18,000 difference in the count, as compared with the vote of 1870, in which the Democrats alone carried the State by over 7,000. Against this total of 18,000 there existed a legitimate offset of 5,000 colored Republican votes never cast before. How are we to account for the disappearance of the 13,000 surplus still left after deducting the colored vote? However it is to be accounted for, let it be remembered if Hendricks is defeated, that it was not for want of Liberal Republican votes.—Chicago Tribune.

This shows that in Indiana, as in Pennsylvania, the old Democrats could not all be brought up to vote even for so popular a man as HENDRICKS, with the talent of GREELEYism upon him. How will the party expect to bring out its strength when the vote is on GREELEY direct, and in face of the October result? Taking the estimate of the Tribune to be correct, two things strike us:—First the impossibility of rallying the Democratic party on GREELEY, and second, the very moderate expectations that were entertained of the accessions from the Republicans.

THE DEMOCRATIC DEFECTION.—The New York Spirit of the Times, in discussing the October elections, very sensibly says:

"First, in this matter, candor compels us to declare that we must expel from our minds the puerile idea that we have been defeated in Ohio and Pennsylvania solely by the corrupt use of money. There was, doubtless, a large amount of villany practiced at the polls in both the above-named States on Tuesday last; but to believe that the decision in both was the pure result of fraud, is not only absurd in fact, but ten times more absurd, in promulgation, as an act of policy.

Doubtless there was a "large amount of villany" practiced in Pennsylvania. There generally is in a great election; but to argue that this was all on one side is arrant nonsense; to argue that more was practiced on the Republican than on the Democratic side is to argue against the teachings of the "Liberal" papers, for years, up to the time when they joined the party that they had always accused of the cheating. The same article goes on:

"But the true translation of our present misfortune is just what we declared it to be in the opening cases of Vermont and Maine. In both of those States, during the initial part of this campaign, the Democrats did not turn out and vote."

This is the true explanation of the great Republican majorities. The Democrats did not turn out and vote. And why did they not turn out and vote? It was not accident; it was not negligence; it was not ignorance; it was because they were not satisfied with the work done in Baltimore; because in their opinion that work was the sale of the Democratic party, and they were not willing to rally the sale. This is the fact that we have assigned as the explanation of the result that has struck the friends of Mr. GREELEY with so great surprise. The Democratic party used to be relied upon for great discipline and obedience; but there are some things that the whole party cannot be carried into, and the "Liberal" strength is quite insufficient without the solid Democratic force.

JUDGE J. T. HOGE has purchased a residence at Fall's Church, Va., and his family are now residing at that place.—Martinsburg Era.

Gentlemen's Fashions.

(From the N. Y. Com. Advertiser.)

Overcoats are worn both in the double-breasted frock or surtout shape, and single or double-breasted (Chesterfields. The former, as allowing more scope for variety and effect of trimming, is preferred by the few of good figures, who pay special attention to their appearance, but the Chesterfield, or sack overcoat, shaped to define the figure, is generally worn, and is the more convenient garment. When single-breasted, the buttonholes are in a fly front, though some, from special materials, are made without a fly, and the buttons to come through. The most fashionable materials are Sardinians, a very fine, soft, and almost smooth napped beaver, diagonal and mixed elysians, treble-milled dressed beavers in rich shades of brown and olive, heavy twilled cheviots of special make and quality, and various cloths of basket and hop-sack pattern. Velvet edges are very much used, while some are braided, "piped" with cloth or double stitched. Fur seal facings, collar and cuffs, will be very fashionable as the season advances. Some of the most stylish coats are faced with quilted silk the same color as the cloth, and velvet collars are indispensable save when fur is used. In evening dress coats there is a decided change. They are now made with a long rolling collar in one piece, without stock of any kind, of grenadine, heavy ribbed silk, or sei de dei, and the cuffs sometimes of the same material. There is one buttonhole only, for a flower, in the roll. The bottom front edge of the forepart and top and bottom of the skirt are gracefully rounded off. The edges are trimmed with a very narrow serpentine or tracing braid, or a single row of fine braid. Waistcoat is cut with the same shaped collar, and to open low. The roll of the collar and the forepart are neatly embroidered with silk or braid in small figures or patterns. Dress trousers are worn rather smaller in the leers than for morning wear, with hip pockets only, and the side seams frequently braided with one-half inch braid.

The Prince of Wales stock is still the most fashionable, as it is the most appropriate coat for semi dress, and is cut rather longer in the waist and skirt than formerly, to button three buttons, lapels medium bold roll, collar not pointed upwards, faced with silk or satin, bound with ribbon or doeskin binding, or flat braided. 'Side edges" on the skirts are no longer fashionable. Waistcoat, double-breasted, with lappels sewn on, to match the coat. For a "dressy" business coat, or in place of the frock on less formal occasions, the three-button morning coat, as it is called, is the leading garment of the season. It is made as long as the frock, single breasted, with step collar, buttoning three buttons, and cut away with a slight inward curve from the lower button, no flaps on the hips, pockets to the plaits, and one outside pocket on the left breast. There is a decided inclination to depart from the diagonal and fancy coatings, so long fashionable, and only very fine and neat patterns now find favor.

A semi-dressed cloth called the "Granite," and an undressed elastic cloth, the "Napier," are the most popular, and dark colored plain cloths, mulberry, dark dahlia, and other rich colors appear to be coming into fashion again.

Checks in all sizes, colors, and combinations are considered the most stylish for undress business wear, and are made up into the new two or three buttoned morning coat, according to figure, with flaps on the hips, or into reefing jacket suits, waistcoats, single breasted, to button medium high, with a step collar. Trousers are worn easy and straight to the leg, the same size at the bottom as at the knee, but without any spring over the boot. Small striped patterns are worn with plain colored frock or morning coats.

Andy Johnson's Missionary Labors.

(From the Cincinnati Commercial.)

The idea that a State is greater than the Nation has been, for more than a generation, so instilled into the Southern mind that even the war has failed entirely to eradicate it. Hence, when a man who adhered to the Union comes up for office he is straightway accused of treason to his State by those who deny that there is treason in waging war upon the United States.

As we have passed the debatable point of this doctrine, and settled by the sword that the Constitution and the laws made in pursuance of it are supreme, anything in State constitutions or laws to the contrary notwithstanding, there is need of sound political missionary work in parts of the South. This work ex-President Johnson is performing in Tennessee. Running as a candidate at large for Congress against General Cheatham, who was a brave officer on the Southern side, he has it daily cast in his face as a reproach that in the crisis of her fate he deserted Tennessee and clung to the Union.

Mr. Johnson was not then, nor has he since been able to see the error of his ways, and in the speeches which he is making to the Tennesseans, tells them very plainly that their first and highest duty is to their country, and that no sphere of State sovereignty could protect them from punishment as traitors had the Government chosen to enforce the penalty against them. He is doing a public service in enlightening the narrow sectional pleas of the people, and cudgelling into their brains the fact that citizenship in the United States involves obligations superior to those they owe to the State. Whether Mr. Johnson is successful or not, he is entitled to the thanks of the Nation for his efforts to extirpate the last roots of a heresy that leads to nullification or secession.

MILLSVILLE, PA., Sept. 5, 1861.

Dr. Wm. H. Tutt:

Dear Sir—In my young days I was rather wild, and became the victim of a boatsome disease. I was treated by an eminent physician, and thought I was cured. After moving to this State, I was horrified at finding that the disease was making its appearance again, in a secondary form. Urers formed in my mouth and on different parts of my body. I also became afflicted with severe rheumatism. I consulted different physicians, and used various patent medicines for months, all to no purpose. During a visit to Jacksonville, I saw your Sarsaparilla and Queen's Delight, and concluded to try it. I have taken a dozen bottles, and believe that the poison is entirely driven from my system. I intend continuing it, however, to make a sure thing of it. At the request of your Agent, I send this to you. You are at liberty to use it as you like.

Yours respectfully,

JOHN H. GUILFORD.
