THE CONVICT LABOR QUESTION.

The Other Side of the Question Presented.

Editors Intelligencer.

Without following your editorial of Tuesday last in detail, I beg leave to refer you to certain facts that are essential to a proper understanding of this important question. As you are no doubt aware, the per cent of convict labor to free labor in the State of West Virginia is almost infinitessimally small. The figures of the census show that it does not exceed the one thirty-second of one per cent. Therefore the competition between them cannot in the nature of things be very close or severe. The pressure of the former on the latter is really more a matter of imagination than of actual fact.

You speak of a carriage and wagon factory in Wheeling that went under some time ago. There were two of them that quit business, if I recollect right. One was situated in the Second ward, and too much larger beer will account for its discontinuance. The other was situated near the post office, the proprietors of which got rich and quit because they did not care to keep in the business any longer. Both stopped before the Webster wagon factory at Moundsville was started, and I don't see the connection between their fall and the rise of the latter. The Webster company employs about thirty-five free laborers and foremen in the different departments of their business in the penitentiary. They purchase and pay for large quantities of lumber, manufactured from the trees that grow on our soil—trees that used to be cut down and rolled into log heaps and burned; but that are now converted into marketable timber. The farmers now realize something for clearing their land, which enables them to pay their taxes. And, in addition to this important consideration, there are more men employed outside—free laborers—by this company, preparing lumber for the concern, than there convicts—all told—in the West Virginia penitentiary.

You have another Wagon Works in Wheeling, of no small dimensions. They do not seem to "squeal" over the situation, judging from appearances, in the way of extensive additions and improvements made to their establishment during the last summer. I should say that they are not seriously interfered with by convict labor.

Mr. Pollack, of your city, employs a certain amount of convict labor in the manufacture of cigars. He has a considerable trade with Canada, Russia and Prussia and other foreign countries. This trade he has hunted up and enjoys. I will venture that his sales of Penitentiary made cigars in the city of Wheeling will not amount to enough to pay his city taxes.

The whip factory of Weaver & Burdett employs about sixty convicts and about fifty-three free laborers and tax payers. Of course if you stop the works you drive these free laborers out of the State to a more congenial field of employment.

I do not know of any broom factory of importance in the State except the one in the Penitentiary. Their brooms are first class and sold at fair prices to consumers, jobbers and retailers. They provide a ready market for all the broom corn raised in this State, besides large quantities from Tennessee and other Southern States.

It is not the custom of this country in taking an apprentice to learn a trade to pay him "jour's" wages for at least three or five years. I spent three years and a half at a trade for which I got my board and washing and $35 per year, and having been raised in a community where they had had free schools in existence for many years, I had the advantage of knowing the difference between a razor and a drawknife. It is different with a large majority of the convicts in our Penitentiary. They come here wild as a Zebra, and it takes two to three years to educate them to the use of tools, or up to a point where any contractor can possibly realize a very large profit from their labor.

The plan of letting out convict labor upon the roads of our State would be attended with all sorts of risks of escapes, starvation and cruelty. The plan has been tried in Old Virginia, and the result was a failure. Take a gang of twenty five convicts out on the roads and you will require at least six good guards for day and night service at a cost of $1 50 per day, or $9 per day in all. These same convicts are now hired to a contractor at, say 40 cents per day, and the cost of boarding them to the State is say 10 cents per day, (they are fed at less than 7 cents) whereas the same men would cost at least $12 50 per day for labor and board and $9 for the guards, making a total of $21 50, in the way of expenses, saying nothing about escapes, rewards and transportation to and from the field of employment, and saying nothing also about the loss of time during the winter months. I will venture the assertion that 15 able-bodied Irishmen, at $1 50 per day each, will turn out more and better road work than your 25 convicts and guards would produce. Then, too, how are our poor tenants to pay their obnoxious $1 50 road tax if they do not work it out.

More might be said on this subject, but I deem the above suggestions sufficient for the present to show that the agitation to do away with convict labor in the Penitentiary is, as things now stand, impracticable in its nature. JUSTICE.

Moundsville, January 12th, 1881.

The Wool and Sheep Interests of the State.

ELM GROVE, January 10.

Editors Intelligencer.

The present session of the Legislature would seem to be a favorable time for a united effort on the part of the wool growers to secure a dog law that will not only protect their interests and give them encouragement in their pursuits, but cause others to go into the business, and thus promote the material interests of the State of West Virginia. We have no doubt that this is a time that wise legislation is demanded on this subject, and that it will result in greater benefits to the State now than at any previous period of its history.

Wide awake men, who are on the lookout for a location, will take into consideration the attitude of our State toward its interests, and will be slow to locate where these interests are not properly encouraged. Those already here may be tempted to leave the State if they find that proper legislation cannot be had to protect their interests. So that if we cannot secure those who are looking to our State for a location we cannot afford to neglect steps necessary to prevent the loss of those who already represent its wool growing interests.

The wool growers do not desire any action on the part of the Legislature that looks to the nursery of their interest. They ask only that protection and security may be afforded them. Shall the woolgrowing interests of this State be permitted to go to the dogs (which it certainly will do for the want of a law to protect it) when relief can so easily be afforded? Would not such a course be suicidal when so much of our land is only fitted for grazing, and so particularly well adapted for sheep?

I believe that every woolgrower in the county would hail with joy the passage of a good dog law, or the removal of the restriction which prevents the operation of the law passed by a previous legislature.

I hope that this subject will receive the attention not only of the Legislature, but especially of those members more directly interested. WOOLGROWER.
