Is nature's own remedy, made from roots gathered from the forests of Georgia. The method by which its virtues were obtained by a half breed from the Creek Indians who inhabited a certain portion of Georgia, which was communicated to one of the early settlers, and thus the formula has been handed down to the present day. The above cut represents the method of manufacture twenty years ago, by Mr. C. T. Swift, one of the present proprietors. The demand has been gradually increasing until a $100,000 laboratory is now necessary to supply the trade. A foreign demand has been created, and enlarged facilities will be necessary to meet it. A ROMANCE OF THE WAR.

How a Live Veteran Often Hears Himself Mentioned As Among the Dead.

Westfield Letter in the Springfield Republican.

Among the list of soldiers from Springfield, Mass, who fell in defense of their country during the late war, as read in the dedication of the Westfield Monument this week was: "Killed at Spottsylvania; May 10, 1864, Francis Ash, 9th Regiment." This reference to a man who has for many years been a resident of this town, and today is hale and hearty, with a wife and family about him, recalls his somewhat romantic of hardships and peril. In April '61 then just entering manhood, he was living with his widowed mother in Springfield, and when the first call for troops was made on the fall of Fort Sumter, too impatient to wait for organization of regiments of this section of the state, he hurried to Boston, and there enlisted in the 9th Massachusetts.

He escaped the enemy's bullets until the two-days fight at Spottsylvania, in May, 1868. The 9th charged the rebels fortifications, captured the first line breastworks, and dashed on for the second. Between the two lines Ash fell, struck by four bullets. With a wound in the head, neck, thigh and leg, his comrades, as they were driven back, left him for dead. The confederate surgeons, however, found sufficient life in him to warrant his being sent to the hospital afterward to Richmond. It was five months, however, before he was well enough to be exchanged, and by that time his regiment had been mustered out of service four months. His mother and friends mourned him as dead, and when he walked into the Adjutant-general's office at Boston, and announcing himself as "Frank Ash, of the 9th Massachusetts, and desired to be mustered out because he had served his time, he was regarded as crazy and when told that the regiment had for many weeks been out of service and the man he represented himself to be was buried on the field of Spottsylvania.

It was only by getting some of the officers of the regiment to appear and certify to his identity that a change in the state record was secured and he was formally discharged. But the regiment record remained unchanged; hence Frank Ash at frequent intervals is obliged to read his own name among the list of killed in battle. He has lived here since the war, and receives a small pension from the Government.

Batted Off the Bridge.

Sam Jones at St. Joseph.

When you have gone all around, whenever you have asked about anybody, they don't talk more than two minutes before they begin to use this conjunctive. They say "He's so and so, but he's so and so." You can take this disjunctive conjunction "but" and chip character all to pieces with it in 1 minute. Now, God tells us Cornelius was a devout man and—don't you see? "And." I like that "and." [laughter.] You can just take any fellow in this town nearly, say all about him, "He's good and kind." Then commence to "but" him, off the bridge, and that is the last of him. Lord have mercy upon us! Is the world a multitude of gossipers and slanderers or is it a fact that nobody can say three good words about us without telling something mean about us. Is that so? "She's pretty good woman, but if she gets mad with you she will never make up," or they say; "She's a right good neighbor, but she wants you to pay back everything you borrow," or, "she's a mighty good wife, but I tell you if her husband don't do to suit her she will give him brimstone." I met those Georgia women, of course. That kind of a thing has never occurred here in St. Joe. I know you women just show in your faces that you are angels. You look as if all you needed was a pair of wings, and you would go to glory without any further cermonies. [Laughter.] It does tickle me just to see you women put on an air of injured innocence. "You know I am just as innocent as can be. I never quarreled with my husband in my life, and I never said a cross word to my children." Sister if you didn't I will get you a pair of wings before night and start you on to glory. [Laughter.]

What a Crow got for Swearing.

Mexico (Mo.) Letter in the Globe-Democrat.

Mrs. B. B. Runkle has a pet crow that can swear in all foreign languages, and when the saucy bird was heard to make a great to-do out in the yard of the lady's residence this afternoon, an investigation resulted in beholding "Jim Crow" making full tilt for the house, with a large snake in pursuit. The reptile chased the bird over the porch and into the hall, when, becoming frightened at the shrieks of Mrs. Runkle and her colored servant, it stopped and coiled up, spreading itself out flat, somewhat resembling a plate. In spite of its ugly appearance Mrs. Runkle grabbed a door weight and killed the snake, which proved to be a spreading viper a little over three feet in length and one of the most venomous reptiles known. When the snake was struck a live frog jumped out of its mouth, which frightened the lady more than the reptile itself.

His Treatment of Horses.

Washington Special to Boston Advertiser.

Mr. Cleveland is more easily reached than any of his lieutenants, unless it be Mr. Whitney. But it does not pay to reach him too often. He has a way of letting one know when he is tired of solicitation.

"Perhaps I have been to see you often enough," suggested one of the delegation which was here on the Portland Custom House business.

"Yes, I think you have," was the reply, and the questioner took the train that night for home. He disconcerts people. Some Missourians were at him the other day urging William Hyde for Postmaster at St. Louis. One of them was extolling Mr. Hyde. Mr. Cleveland wriggled around.

"I have heard all this," he said "and it's no use to repeat it to me. If you have anything new to say, I shall be glad to hear it."

A Flute in His Throat.

Boston Globe.

Dr. Roswell Park, of Buffalo, has just made and inserted a silver larynx and wind-pipe into a man's throat to take the place of one eaten out by cancer. A small reed in the upper end enables the patient to talk. Owing to the hasty preparation for the job, but one note was put in, and the man has to talk in a uniform key. It would be a good plan for the doctor to build the rest of his silver windpipes with keys and stops like a cornet. The patient could then talk with his wife in C natural and go down to the club and play poker in B flat. By concealing the finger pieces in his whiskers he could pass for a musical prodigy and make lots of money. He would have to be taken out of town, however, every night. Just think of sleeping next room to a man who played a cornet all night long. It would be worse than snoring.

A Blue Spring Alligator.

Tampa Fla. Tribune.

Tom Williams' bay mule which has been at work on the railroad at Blue Springs, was allowed to graze on the green point across the mouth of the Blue Spring Creek, and, after a while, lay down on this point to rest, with its back to the river. Only a few minutes elapsed before an immense alligator was seen to dash out of the river, its jaws stretched to their utmost, and as he came within the reach of the teeth of the alligator were buried in the poor mule's flesh just in the rear of the shoulder blades. In the terrible scramble that ensued the lower jaw, it was supposed, was broken and the shoulder blades of the mule were left bare. An alligator was seen going into the water with his jaw swinging, and Tom Williams is unfortunate in the loss of a very fine mule.

WAGES AND LIVING.

Some Interesting Facts Gathered in Germany—How They do it Over There.

New York Daily Telegraph.

The wages of farm labor throughout Germany vary from nine cents a day in Silesia to twenty-five cents in Prussia, twenty-six cents in Posen, thirty cents in Saxony, thirty-two cents in Hesse Darmstadt and Bavaria, thirty-four cents in Pomerania, thirty-six cents in Hanover, thirty-seven cents in Westphalia, thirty-nine cents in Wurtemberg and Baden, and forty-four cents in the conquered territory of Alsace-Lorraine.

From the carefully collected statistics of 119 trades at Berlin, it appears that the number of hours per day varies from ten to thirteen, and the weekly compensation from $1 19 for boys to $4 28 for good mechanics. Men whose skill would command here from $25 to $30 per week are paid in the German capital from $5 71 to $7 28.

The food prices are as follows: Wheat flour, $5 to $6 per hundred pounds; cornmeal, 5½ a 6 cents per pound; table butter, 30 a 38 cents; beef and mutton for roasts, 17 to 20 cents; pork, 16 to 20 cents; ham, 25 to 30; chickens, 18 to 20; fresh fish, 20 to 30; sugar, white, pulverized or granulated, 12 cents per pound; eggs, 25 to 28 cents per dozen.

These figures speak for themselves. Every one can compare them with the rates of wages and prices of food stuffs ruling in any part of the United States If wages are so low and food is so dear in Germany the conclusion is obvious that the manner of living is very different there from what it is in this country. Not only economy must be practised to an extent which few of our citizens can realize, but all the members of the family must be wage earners. Laboring women are accustomed to perform the most menial, and even the hardest kind of labor, such as would be performed in the United States by the strongest men only. From an official report concerning the coal and metal industries of Upper Silesia for 1880, it appears that 2,567 women were employed in the coal mines; 2,535 females, 231 of whom were under 16 years of age, were employed in zinc mines; 1040, of whom 146 were girls under 16, worked in iron mines; while 1,101 toiled in smelting works and rolling mills.

Such is the cost at which the great iron master of Essen, Herr Krupp, is sometimes enabled to undersell the English manufacturers of steel in England; and such is the cost at which our free traders are anxious that we should enter into competition with the world.

OSCE upon a midnight dreary, as I pondered weak and weary,
On my teeth and how to save them; as I sighed, as was my wont,
Suddenly I heard a tapping, as of some one gently rapping
And a voice then said distinctly, "You must try the SOZODONT;

"Teeth will whiten, breath will sweeten, and they'll vex you never more." TTHSAW

Breadstuffs and Provisions.

CHICAGO, Oct. 14.—The day was one of extraordinary excitement, active trading, rapid fluctuations and extreme nervousness on change. The sharp advance yesterday and the strong closing left in the afternoon made the opening this morning in wheat one of great uncertainty, and there was a mad rush and wildly varying in prices when the trading began. The foreign markets were quoted strong without any advance in prices, but British consols were quoted ⅛ percent lower, which was taken to mean trouble in the Balkan states. The strongest influences, however, were domestic, and apparently the same as those which have governed the course of prices for the past few days. The buying was very free at the opening at an advance of ⅝a⅞c over the latest trading of yesterday afternoon, but prices varied during the first fifteen minutes fully ⅝c in various parts of the crowd. The tone was steadier in the afternoon and the market finally closed at 92⅝c for December, which was the official close yesterday. Flour—Inquiry still continues good. Stocks are very light. Wheat ruled active, nervous and unsettled; the market opened strong at ⅝a⅞c higher, receded ½c on free offerings, rallied ½c, sold off 1½c and finally closed ¼c under yesterday; sales ranged: October 90¾a90½c, closed at 90¼c; November 91¾a92⅝c, closed at 91⅝c; December, 93¾a91¾c, closed 93⅝c; May $1 03¾a1 03¼, closed at $1 00¾; No. 2 spring 90½c; No. 3 spring 78a80c; No. 4 red 63¾a64c; No. 3 red 87c.
