OUR COLUMBUS LETTER.

BY "A MEMBER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES."

Essentially a Young Men's Legislature. The Oldest Living Legislator—Still Voting for Andrew Jackson—A Busy Session Predicted.

COLUMBUS, Jan. 4.

"Yoho, Mr. Speaker," is the euphonious ending of the roll call of the membership of the lower house of the Ohio legislature. Just call these words out at the top of your voice as the clerk does, and the combination will cause a smile that Mr. Yoho's Democracy and Mr. Speaker's Republicanism can not down.

The legislature has been in session but a few hours, yet it is demonstrated its likeness to a circus, in one respect at least—it is made up of all sorts of men; fat men, lean, young men and old, bald-headed and bushy-haired—and no doubt when we get better acquainted all the human characteristics on the calendar of life will crop out. However, the number of young men in both branches is noticeable. One member is but twenty-six, another twenty-seven, two are twenty-eight, three are thirty, and many under thirty-five. One of the senators is but thirty-one, one thirty-four and many under forty. This is essentially a young men's legislature, and it remains to be seen whether its vim and vigor will bear the fruit of wise legislation. Let us hope so.

In the House.

Mr. Speaker Laylin, in his brief speech after his election, won the esteem of all men of all parties—if, indeed, he did not already possess it. When he announced that he proposed to treat the members no doubt.

Just at present the committee on mileage, appointed today, is the object of distinguished consideration from every side. May it do its work quickly and give every man enough, is the toast being mentally drunk on every side.

A MEMBER OF THE HOUSE.

LEWIS C. LAYLIN.

on his left with the same fairness that he did those of the majority, he was cheered from every part of the hall. He also gave some excellent advice concerning local legislation, in which he said that not only the spirit of the constitution was often violated, but the letter also.

The first brush in the house came Monday afternoon, when Mr. McGrew, the defeated candidate for speaker, and Mr. Taylor, of Champaign county, together with several elderly and infirm members, received the courtesy of choosing their seats first. Mr. Griffin, of Lucas county, thought that Mr. Taylor's name ought not to be "on the list," and he very frankly said so; but a vote of 39 to 36 showed that he was in a slight minority. Whether this vote is significant as to future divisions, of course, remains to be seen; but the way some of the wise solons chuckled after the vote was announced led one to think so.

In the Senate.

Over in the senate chamber all is quiet and dignity; each senator seems to be weighted with the responsibility of his position. Senator Green, of Cuyahoga county, the first negro to occupy a seat in the senate of any northern state, has a conspicuous seat in the rear row. Mr.

W. V. MARQUIS.

Green, however, is apt to be heard from nevertheless. Lieutenant Governor Marquis, a gray whiskered old gentleman, presides with dignity and grace, but next week he will step down and become a private citizen, to make room for Mr. Harris.

It is said that one Colonel Fred Blankner founded the Ohio legislature 135 years ago, and that he has run it ever since so that he might be third assistant sergeant-at-arms of the house. Be that as it may, Colonel Blankner is always elected to that honorable and useful position. Senators come and senators go, Democratic legislatures come and so do Republican, but Colonel Blankner goes on forever. He says he has only been here thirty-seven years, but as there is no one who has been here long enough to dispute him we all have to take his word for it. At any rate he is active, kind hearted, obliging, as well as white haired and smiling, and his whistle is as chipper as a school boy's. Colonel Fred Blankner is of the salt of the earth, and may his shadow never grow less.

A Republican Andrew Jackson.

We are still voting for Andrew Jackson here in the house. This is the same man they are voting for in the wilds of West Virginia and the mud holes of Illinoisan Egypt for the presidency. Our Andrew Jackson is a Republican, however, and is now sergeant-at-arms of the house.

The Battle Royal.

Probably no letter from the capital of the greatest state on earth at this time ought to be written without at least speaking of the senatorial contest. Before this has reached the readers' eyes the contest will be over, but it is no question but that it is one of the greatest political battles ever fought in this state since the war. There have probably been times when greater political interests have been at stake that have produced intensity of feeling, but it is said by those who have witnessed many such that the present is without parallel a battle royal, in which one of the most gallant of soldiers and most consummate of politicians is pitted against one of the greatest statesmen and calmest of political workers of the times. On both sides are shrewd workers, skilled in directing political ambitions and political contests of large and small degree. There are the so-called bosses, the lieutenants and the long line of workers, each recognized according to the kind of work he can and will do. It is indeed a battle, fought by armies of such strength that now at almost the last moment it is impossible to tell which is the strong and which the weak. Even the small contingent of unprejudiced observers do not agree as to the outcome. But wait until it is all over, and every mother's son of them will be strutting around Columbus with proof positive that "I told you so" is the correct way to put it as far as he is concerned. 'Tis ever thus.

A Busy Session.

This will be an unusually busy session if all the signs do not fail. There are few members who haven't a bill or two ready to drop into the legislative slot at the first signal. When it is remembered that some sessions see nearly 2,000 measures offered for consideration, while some members never offer one, it is seen that some of the statesmen at Columbus at least earn their salaries in drawing up what is to them the wisest of legislation.

It will be a week or ten days before the regular grind begins, for Speaker Laylin will not appoint his committees for some days, and next Monday inauguration will distract the members no

SPECIAL MARKET LETTER.

W. G. Press & Co., Bankers & Commission Merchants, Nos. 2 and 4 Sherman Street, Chicago, in their last special market letter say: The revival of speculative interest in Stocks, Bonds, Grain and Provisions which was so generally predicted before the advent of the New Year was manifest in securities as soon as the holiday festivities were over, and has since increased in intensity under the influence of advancing prices, but in grain and provisions the absence of outside interest during the first business days of the year disappointed waiting holders, who at once began disposing of their property, causing a general feeling of weakness and a reduction in values. As usual, the interest centered in wheat which declinded until longs who, unable to protect their trades, and those who desired to limit their losses, sold out and it became evident that the offerings were being steadily absorbed, when a reaction began which inspired bulls with renewed courage and enabled them to steadily enhance values and broaden the market until the public evinced a disposition to again enter the speculative arena; but before an entire restoration of confidence was assured, the unexpected promulgation of the Official Report of the Department of Agriculture at Washington, stating the area and yield of the crops of 1891 in measured bushels, blasted the hopes of bulls who again hastened to sell out, and embolden the bears who attacked the market with vigor, and a courage born of success, resulting in another decline which was rapid enough to bring out long wheat freely on top orders and exhausted margins. The report, which was responsible for the break, shows the area of wheat to have been 39,619,897 acres, and the yield 611,780,000 bushels; of corn 76,204,315 acres, and the yield 2,060,154,000 bushels; and of oats 25,581,961 acres, and the yield 738,394,000 bushels, and while showing a yield of wheat considerably under the estimate of chronic short sellers the figures were much larger than the trade generally expected. With such an exportable surplus as this report indicates, the requirements of Europe and the condition of the growing crop become factors of the greatest importance, for on the prospects of our next harvest will depend the freedom with which farmers market the remaining surplus, and on the necessities of Europe must its disposal depend. The past week has been rather unfavorable for the growing plant, but not sufficiently so as to cause increased damage. The Agricultural Department is authority for the statement, that it is in poor condition to withstand severe winter weather without being well protected by snow.

The corn market, which naturally responds to the fluctuations in wheat, was less affected than the latter by the Official Report, although the yield was somewhat larger than previous reports had indicated. The better service rendered by railways in its transportation is apparent in the liberal eastern shipments to meet the steady domestic and export demands. The scarcity of breadstuffs in Europe which necessitates the substitution of something for unobtainable rye, is creating a better demand for our corn, which is proving to foreign consumers its value as a wholesome, nutritious and cheap bread grain.

The oat market has attracted more than its customary share of attention, and while affected in a general way by the influences apparent in wheat and corn, was not adversly influenced by the reported yield which was about thirteen million bushels less than the previous year's crop. The better transportation service resulted in liberal shipments, and the outward movement promises to be quite liberal for some time, the demand from the East, to replenish depleted stocks being excellent, while large quantities are needed to supply the winter's export requirements.

The promise of lighter receipts of hogs during the remainder of the winter, and the belief that the eastern shippers will be active competitors of the packers for the diminished supply, imparted a feeling of confidence in the future of provisions which was not destroyed by the weakness in grain after the issuing of the Government Report. About the only depressing feature noticeable, which through its influence on general business in the South may necessitate economy in a section where hog product is liberally consumed, was the panicky feeling in cotton, which has carried prices to an abnormally low point. Recent prices for provisions have been relatively lower than the hogs from which they were made, and packers are credited with having bought liberally before any material advance occurred.

Teacher's Institute.

The Plain township Teacher's Institute will be held at New Berlin, January 23, 1892. Afternoon and evening session. The entire afternoon will be devoted to the discussion on "How to grade the common schools of Plain township.

Every teacher in the township, every school director and every parent who is interested in the education of the rising generation, should not fail to be present. Programme for evening: "How to Teach Addition," E. S. Correll. "Kindergarten Work," Anna Metzgar. "Functions of the Lungs," Corwin Hill. Essay, Flora Lichty. "Civil Government," J. A. Syler.

A Middlebranch Wedding.

At the residence of the bride's parents near Middlebranch, Tuesday, Mr. John Lilley and Mrs. Loretta Gans were married by Rev. M. Moses, of Greentown.

IN theatre parlance, as used on the road, a $1.00 a day hotel is a plunk house. How slang is growing.
