A Sleeping Car Incident.

Let me describe some of the experiences of a Pullman's palace car: If the cars are full, it is embarrassing to a shy man. What must it be to the fairer sex, demonstrative in their endearments both on the cars and steamboats, but this leats all. In the sections of a railroad car, as in a wooden house, even whispered remarks are very audible, especially at night, when everything is still. For example, one evening, when we had all retired, a low voice was suddenly heard from the center of the car—

"Fanny—Fanny—, ive me a kiss and say you forgive me!"

Then a little louder.

"Fanny—Fanny—I can't s'eep unless you say you forgive me. Give me a kiss and say you forgive me."

At last the voice of the penitent husband, regardless of the tittering from the surrounding partitions, spoke up again.

"Fanny—Fanny—just one kiss and say you forgive me."

At last a pepperv old Indian officer, down at the end of the car, popped his head out and shouted:

"Oh, Fonny, for Christ's sake! do give him a kiss and let us go to sleep."

One of the jurors who acquitted the Nobles of murder at Peoria—Isaac Bahrer—got so drunk in celebrating the event, that he was sent to the workhouse for six months.
