Sinnissippi Insurance Co.

OF INDIANAPOLIS.

THIS ENTERPRISING COMPANY is now doing an extensive and flourishing business within the limits of the State, and inasmuch as it confines the business of the company to the State, the patronage of our people is solicited.

Policies are issued for any period not exceeding 7 years, at rates as reasonable as the prompt payment of losses will permit, on all kinds of Business Houses, Water Mills, Hotels, Churches, Schoolhouses, Dwelling Houses, Barns, and out-houses, together with the contents of each, both in town and country.

PARTICULAR ATTENTION GIVEN TO THE INSURANCE OF FARM PROPERTY.

Indianians—you have been paying and continue to pay to companies located in Illinois, Connecticut, New York and other States, hundreds of thousands of dollars per annum. This immense sum sent out of the State for insurance purposes can be retained and circulated among our own citizens, for which purpose has been instituted.

You have new an opportunity of insuring your property with a safe and reliable company in our own State. It should be the pride and pleasure of every citizen to encourage home enterprise—and by comparing the plan of this company with that of others no person can fail to perceive the advantages of the SINNI-SIPPI over any similar institution doing business in our State.

McCLELLAN.

A political party must be very badly off, which has no better material out of which to make a President than General McClellan.

There are two views in which McClellan's claims as a Presidential candidate may be considered—military and civil. As a military man he has had experience, and the most splended opportunity of any man in the nation. He failed, and is out of command, whether because of his own want of merit, or because of the want of penetration in somebody else, who ought to have co-operated with him, is a disputed question. The most that his friends can claim is, that it is not his fault that he was not successful. All the testimony in his favor is therefore really of a suppositive character, founded upon the exploits which he must have performed, had circumstances been different. This may in McClellan's case be really good evidence, but as a rule, it is so indefinite that we can't see why it should not be urged in favor of half the men in the country as well as for McClellan. If the proof consisted of what he had done, instead of what he might have done, the case would be much more satisfactory.

Still we would not deny to McClellan the qualifications of a fair military man. He has been a close student, and so far as the theory of war is concerned, is doubtless a master of it; but he has trusted too much to theory, and lost battles with the utmost precision of science. A less scientific general and one who was more self-reliant, might have done a great deal worse, and he might have done a great deal better. Everything in General McClellan's military career indicates a want of capacity or of confidence. Although he commanded large armies for nearly two years, he has never accomplished a brilliant thing. He was charged with the special duty of taking Richmond, but failed to do it, although he twice moved upon it. Once, as the story goes, he was deterred by Quaker guns, and once by real guns. McClellan's is not the genius which might have enabled him to rise superior to circumstances. He did not succeed, and in order to give him credit for doing his best, which we are disposed to do, we are forced to the satisfactory conclusion that if he had been a more capable general he might have done much better.

As a statesman, McClellan has done nothing. He has had no experience. With opportunity, he might accomplish a great deal—and he might fail utterly. No man can tell; and it is proposed to put the destinies of this great nation into the hands of such a man—a General without victory, and a statesman without experience.

If the Democratic party were a new organization, yet destitute of leaders, we should not wonder at such a choice. But the Democratic party is a very old organization, and has its tried and trusted leaders in abundance. When it is driven to turn aside from these, and take up a new, untried man like McClellan, it indicates that its course has not been one which in itself commands the support of the American people. When it dares not trust its own leaders, it is a proof of their failure. It must be a matter of deep humiliation to them, to find themselves shoved aside in favor of a man utterly without position. (Missouri Democrat.)

A woman is worth a great deal or she is worth nothing. If good for nothing, she is not worth getting jealous for; if she is a true woman, she will give no cause for jealousy. A man is a brute to be jealous of a good woman—a fool to be jealous of a worthless one, but he is a great fool to cut his throat for either of them.

Recently General Sherman found the rebel forces opposite him retaking their artillery fire for several days, and no amount of artillery practice from our side sufficed to draw on the rebel artillery, but believing that Johnson or Ewell was tempting him to make an assault and had secretly massed his guns to inflict a murderous repulse. How to discover where the rebel guns were placed was now the question. All other efforts failing, Sherman at last uncovered, the rebel batteries by the help of an ingenious practical joke. The railroad track stretched past a part of our front, and down close to the rebel line, which is skirted for some distance. Sherman started an old worn-out locomotive down the track at full speed toward the right. They heard its shrill shriek, saw it and opened their whole line of batteries at the iron monster. This was all Sherman wanted.

Worldly morality is wise self-seeking, holiness is wiser self-renouncing.

Anecdote of English Judges.

The July number of Fraser's Magazine has the following stories:

"Lord Mansfield, the prince of courtesy, was in the habit of reading newspapers and answering letters in court. Lord Eldon did so too; and Lord Abinger would do it ostentatiously and offensively, to mark his contempt for the advocate. Lord Clare, who had a life long feud with Curran, beginning with a duel, once brought a Newfoundland dog into a court, and gave it his exclusive attention whilst Curran was speaking. The counsel paused. Proceed, Mr Curran; pray proceed, said the Lord Chancellor, looking up with his hand on the head of his canine companion. "I will proceed my lord, when your lordships have concluded your consultation."

"Anecdotes abound of Chief Justice Wilde's gallantry, not to say profligacy, which we cannot venture to reproduce; and Coswell reports a conversation with Jekyll in 1773, which appears to have been suggested by some judicial irregularity. On the same evening, he would not allow that the private life of judge, in England, was required to be so strictly decorous as I supposed. "Way, then, sir," said I, 'according to your account an English judge must live like a gentleman." Johnson: "Yes sir, if he can."

"When Lord Northington (Hedley) was Master of the Rolls, he requested leave of the king to discontinue the evening sitting of his court, and on being called on for a reason replied, because, please your Majesty, I am always drunk after dinner. Within the memory of the senior members of the profession, the Court of Exchequer was stated to be composed of one judge, who was a gentleman and no lawyer, and no gentleman; I third who was neither; and a fourth, who was both. This description, in which strict accuracy may have been sacrificed to antithesis, recalls Charles Lamb's peculiar remark, on four friends of the Lake school—that one would tell a lie, but would not pick a pocket, another would pick a pocket, but would not tell a lie; a third would do both—selecting, of course, the protested moralist for the climax.

"The gentlemen-judge, not a lawyer was Baron Graham; and some curious stories are told of his uniform politeness on the bench. In his day, it was usual to suspend judgment in the criminal cases till the conclusion of the assizes, and deliver all the sentences in a lump. A name had been accidentally omitted the list of capital punishments, of which he was reminded on coming to the end of the list. "O, yes, I see, John Thomson—John Thomson, I beg your pardon; you are also to be hanged by the neck till you are dead, and may the Lord have mercy on your miserable soul too!"

"Johnson records that, as the trial of Savage for murder, Page concluded an inflammatory address to the jury in this fashion: Gentlemen of the jury, you are to consider that Mr. Savage is a very great man, much greater than you or I, gentlemen of the jury; that he wears very fine clothes, much finer clothes than you or I, gentlemen of the jury; but, gentlemen of the jury, is it not a very hard case, gentlemen of the jury, that Mr. Savage should therefore kill you or me, gentlemen of the jury?"

Oddities, Entities and Sentiment.

"You have been sorely tried," said a sympathising neighbor to old Joe Crawdon, weeping over the coffin of his third wife. "Yes," responded the bereaved one, "I have always had the dreadfulest luck with women."

An Irishman being in church where the collection apparatus resembled election boxes, on its being handed to him, whispered in the carrier's ear that he was not naturalized and consequently could not vote.

A young lady, in a class studying physiology, made answer to a question put, that in six years a human body became entirely changed, so that not a particle which was in at the commencement of the period would remain in it at the close of it. "Then, Miss L," said the tutor, "In six years you will cease to be Miss L?" "Why, yes, sir, I suppose so," said she very modestly looking at the floor.

If an ill-natured reviewer finds a passage he pretends to think not worth the ink and paper used in publishing it, he is very sure to use as much more in re-publishing it.

The laws of Connecticut got blue two centuries ago. The lawyers in a good many States have frequently done so ever since.

We are told to weigh our thoughts; most men and women would need a very small pair of scales.

A young lover, even when his love is most prosperous, loses heart.

Many calumnies are injurious even after they are refuted. Like the Spanish flies, they sting when alive, and blister when dead.

Poor men plant and gather the corn and the rich ones drink the whisky.

Charity may gush forth from the hardest heart, like silver water from the rock.

Young lady, get your lover upon his knees, but don't let him get you upon them.

There is a dull ring about a bad piece of coin, as there is about the moon in hazy weather.

The children of scolding parents are hothouse plants.

Woman is the concerse of the great human proposition.

It is no misfortune for a nice young lady to lose her good name, if a nice young gentleman gives her a better.

Many thistles grow upon Parnassus. That must be the reason that so many donkeys browse there.

Some men are odious to vulgar people on account of their high rank in society.—Each one of them may say, like the King in Hamlet, "O, my offense is rank."

Love causes a pulling of caps by one sex and the explosion of caps by the other.

Reflection should precede writing and follow reading.

Books in these days are generally like some kinds of trees—a good many leaves and no fruit.

Many a man is "blackballed" by those who are scarcely fit to perform that operation upon his boots.

A good many extraordinary objects came to the surface when the great guns of war shook the waters.

In our old age the mind brings together the scenes of to-day and those of the long gone time. We shut eighty years into each other like the joints of a pocket telescope.

There are many trials in life which do not seem to come from unwisdom or folly. They are silver arrows shot from the bow of god and fixed inextricably in the quivering heart.

There is no day born but comes like a stroke of music into the world and sings itself all the way through.

Clouds never send down to ask the grass and plants below how much they need; they rain for the relief of their own full bosoms.

If you would grow up to the skies, you must be planted first low in the dust.

A junior partner in a firm on India street concluded to raise a substitute, and applied to a stout darkey who was standing on the opposite corner, when he received this reply: "Lor bless you, I've got eight hundred dollars at home to buy a white man for myself."

HARDWARE.

TERRE HAUTE, June 1, 1864.

We have this day sold our stock of Hardware to Mr. James M. Lyons, and we cordially recommend him to our former friends, and hope they will extend to him the same liberal patronage they have to the old firm.

A. C. & W. S. POTWIN.

Having purchased Messrs. Potwin's stock of Hardware at 150 Main street, shall add such goods in this line as the wants of the community demand and shall endeavor to keep fully supplied at all times with a complete stock, and hope by strict attention to business, and by selling at the lowest prices, to merit the patronage of the public.
