AUCTION SALES.

By O'Neal & Lucas, Auctioneers.

BY VIRTUE of a decree of the Corporation Court of the city of Alexandria, entered on January 8th 1881, in the chancery cause of Edelin's adm'r. vs. Edelin et al's., I will sell by public auction, in front of the Fairfax st. entrance to the Market Building, on SATURDAY the 30th day of April, 1881, at 12 o'clock m., the following real estate, viz:

The LOT OF GROUND on the east side of Pitt street, between King and Cameron streets, fronting on Pitt street twenty-three feet and running back to the centre of the square. There is a FOUR STORY BRICK CARRIAGE FACTORY on the front of the lot and a three story BRICK BLACKSMITH SHOP on the back of it.

Terms of Sale: One third cash, and the residue in two equal payments at six and twelve months from date of sale; the deferred payments to bear interest from day of sale; the purchaser to give his bonds for the deferred payments, and the title to be retained until the whole of the purchase money is paid.

For Bald Men to Read.

The New York Sun publishes a letter from a French hairdresser, in which he says: In ancient times baldness was known and Julius Cæsar was bald. And of all the decrees passed in his honor by the Senate none was so agreeable to him as that which gave him the right to wear constantly a wreath of laurels.

The great orator, Cicero, also had a bald pate, and so had the philosopher, Socrates; but the latter never complained of his baldness; on the contrary he thanked the gods for having deprived him of his hair, being persuaded that his wife, Xantippe, in a fit of rage, would have torn it all out.

In courage, many persons who have become bald seem bitterly to regret the absence of their hair, when they ought, it seems to me, to be satisfied with it. Baldness, from my point of view, is a mark of superiority. In my long experience as a hairdresser, I have noticed that it is only the men endowed with superior intelligence, such as philosophers, literary men and inventors—in a word, men who aid the march of progress with the produce of their brains—who are bald. This is not the case with the unfortunates deprived of reason. I, like every body else, have remarked that idiots and cretins have skulls abundantly supplied with capillary tubes.

Those who lived in Paris under the empire must remember the eccentric person who died a few years ago, and who was known as "The Walking Jeweller's Shop," on account of the quantity of his diamonds, the Duke of Brunswick, who, through a disease of his system, completely lost his hair and even his eyebrows, so that his hair dresser had to paint them on him, with as much skill as could be displayed by the famous portrait painter, Carolus Duran. To hide the nudity of his head, this millionaire duke had thirty one wigs, all different as regards length, in order to make the deception the more complete. On the first day of the month he put on a wig with hair shaved close, and the last day he put on one with hair somewhat long. The day that he wore the close cut wig was a happy day for him, for of all the pleasures that his immense fortune procured him there was not one that could flatter his vanity more than to hear one of his lady friends remark: "Oh, the duke has had his hair cut!" Juste, then, what happiness it gave him. Everybody believed that he had the locks of Absalom. For a long time he preferred to display his baldness rather than wear a wig. False hair he despised, and it was only after an adventure which, although very strange, did not terminate so fatally for him as that of the poet Æschylus, who was killed by a tortoise that an eagle as stupid as it was voracious let fall upon his head, thinking it was a rock, that the duke decided to cover his head with a wig.

One day, after a copious breakfast at the restaurant of the Pavilion d'Armenville, in the Bois de Boulogne, he took a walk in the enclosure of the Jardin d'Acclimatation. It was in the month of July. The heat was overpowering, and, dig such aiding, he felt the need of a siesta. Reaching a shady place, he lay down upon the grass, after taking off his hat. He had hardly enjoyed a quarter hour of the comfort which Morpheus supplies when he was awakened by a strange sensation. Half smothered, he opened his eyes, and found that an march of the finest sort had comfortably seated herself upon his face. His complete baldness had deceived the great African biped, which, prompted, doubtless, by the maternal instinct, mistook the noble head of the duke for one of its eggs.

I don't think I am far from the truth when I say that during the past twenty-five years that I have practiced the profession of hair-dresser, I have made the trial upon different bald heads of more than 500 different hair tonics, and I am bound to admit that I never saw a single head the hair of which was restored after baldness. The bad habit of wearing hats indoors is very hurtful to the hair. In 1806 after the famous battle of Jena, in which the Prussians were completely defeated by Napoleon I., Baron Larrey, the celebrated military surgeon, perceived that many of the German prisoners were completely bald. Surprised, he made inquiries as to the cause of this, and he found that they owed their baldness to the shape—as homely as unhealthy—of their caps. The foul air of the headgear, having no issue, destroyed the vitality of the hair.

For several years the hairdressers of London have adopted a new process to prevent the falling out of the hair. They burn with an iron brought to a white heat, or with the flame of a candle, the extremity of the point of the hair. This system is so efficacious that the Prince of Wales is to-day reduced to the necessity of brushing his hair with a sponge.
