Guiteau's Campaign Speech.

Frequent reference has been made during the trial to Guiteau's speech, "Garfield and Hancock"—the same which he sent to the President bearing the significant words "Consulship at Paris."

The little page of the pamphlet is lettered as follows:

"Garfield against Hancock. A Speech by Charles Guiteau, of Chicago, Illinois Delivered in New York, Aug. 6, 1880 New York address: Republican National Committee 241 5th avenue. The Past Reviewed."

The speech printed in the pamphlet is as follows:

"In 1861 this nation was convulsed by one of the most gigantic wars on record. For generations America had been cursed by human slavery, and the conviction had been growing among all classes that no nation could always continue half free and half slave. In 1834 William Lloyd Garrison, backed by Wendell Phillips, the silver tongued orator of Boston, assaulted American slavery as in league with the lower regions. They denounced it in season and out of season, by voice and pen. Little by little they were backed by Horace Greeley—the great and good Horace—Henry Ward Beecher, Harriet Beecher Stowe, with her Uncle Tom's Cabin—a matchless work of fiction—Charles Sumner, who was stricken down in the U. S. Senate by 'Bully' Brooks, of South Carolina, and scores of like-minded compatriots. In 1856 the republican party was organized. It was an offshoot of the old whig party founded by Henry Clay—he of matchless eloquence—and Daniel Webster, the favorite and gifted son of New England and the great defender of our national Constitution. In 1856 Fremont, the standardbearer of the young republicans, was defeated for the Presidency by Buchanan, backed by the slave oligarchy. In 1861 the republicans elected to the Presidency Abram Lincoln—the immortal Lincoln. This was the signal for a grand onslaught by the slave oligarchy on the principles of liberty and progress. In 1861, after years of agitation for and against American slavery, the cannons were heard booming around Sumpter, and our national existence was in peril. Jeff. Davis and his conspirators had seceded. They had stolen some of our forts and emoluments of war, and were trying to run a government on their own account. They had trampled under foot our national flag—that grand old ensign of our republic. When the rebels assaulted Sumpter it stirred the North to its depths. To arms! to arms! resounded all over this broad land. Thousands of brave boys went forth to battle, to victory or to death. They left their homes and loved ones, many never to return. Their mangled remains lie buried in many a grave. After years of war came peace. Our national flag again waved in triumph from every fort and battlement in the republic, and slavery was no more. In 1861 there lived in Galena, in my own native State of Illinois, a quiet, modest man. He had graduated at West Point; he had seen service in California and Oregon, he had tasted poverty and distress in St. Louis and Galena.

When President Lincoln called for 75,000 troops to suppress the incipient rebellion Capt. Grant determined to offer his services to the Government, and went to Springfield and interviewed Gov. Yates. After some delay he was given a petition and finally sent into the field as a colonel. Little by little he arose, till he became general of the national arms. From Galena, through the war to the White House, was but a step. From the White House, around the globe, the recipient of the greatest ovations ever given to mortal man was but another. Such prosperity would have crazed most men, but it did not Grant. The great silent man's head is just as level to-day as when he sold cowhides in the streets of Galena. The military genius of Grant is not surpassed by that of Julius Cæsar or the great Napoleon.

Originally a Grant man, I am well satisfied with Garfield's nomination.

"Nothing but an act of God," said the great Senator from New York, "can prevent Grant's nomination." Gen. Garfield was born in poverty and obscurity, and has attained his present position under Providence by his own efforts. When the war came he was president of a small college in Ohio, and promptly offered his services to the government in suppressing the rebellion. After nearly three years service he was made a major-general. He was then elected to Congress and has held the position ever since. His long services on some of the most important committees show that he is a square man, and can be implicitly trusted. Some people say he got badly sailed in the Credit Mobilier transaction, but, I guess he is clear-headed. Last winter he was elected to the United States Senate, in the place of Senator Thurman, and to-day he is the republican nominee for the presidency, with every prospect of success. He is a high-toned, conscientious Christian gentleman.

Some persons are down on Gen. Arthur because he was removed from the New York collectorship by President Hayes. Gen. Arthur was appointed collector by Gen. Grant, and held that important office several years and gave unbounded satisfaction to the merchants of New York by his able and careful administration of his office, and he is supposed to have been removed without sufficient cause. Gen. Arthur is a lawyer of marked ability, great culture, wide experience and would be an ornament in the Vice-President's chair. When I was a boy, Washburne represented the Galena and Freeport district in Congress. I was born in Freeport, Illinois and I have watched with marked pride the brilliant career of Grant and Washburne. Grant, Washburne, Garfield.—these names go together, Grant renowned in war and peace; Washburne, distinguished for his civil service at home and abroad, and Garfield, the scholar, soldier and statesman.

In October last, in old Faneuil Hall, in Boston, I heard Senator Chandler, who was the greatest Roman of us all, say that the rebel spirit then was the same that it was twenty years ago, just prior to the treasing out of the rebellion, and he was right. The democratic party, now in a majority in Congress, would precipitate this nation into another war had they the power, and they would have the power, save for President Hayes and his stalwart Cabinet. The democratic majority now in Congress makes it imperative that the President and Cabinet be republican. Otherwise the national government will be entirely controlled by ex-rebels and their northern friends.

The "document" concludes with a wild, incoherent attack upon the democratic party.
