Preparing the Public Mind for the Worst.

The editor of the Cincinnati Commercial is in Washington, where he is looking in upon Congress, and writing letters home to his paper. A letter in the Commercial of Saturday above his initials indicates that he is desperately nervous about the Union. He must have seen the elephant, or been playing with the tiger. We do not remember to have ever before read more startling sentences; never before more delicious revilings; and we once read a Bible work whose contents were contributed by patients in a lunatic asylum. The editor of the Commercial has either seen a real spectre, or he has been made the butt of frequent visits to the National Capitol. If it were any other paper, we would surmise that he had been imposed upon by the presence of an owl that had lost its way, and wearied its weary wing to the Hall of the Nation, where it had found lodgment in spite of the roosters about the great eve. Seriously, then, the editor of the Cincinnati Commercial seriously writes that he seriously believes the Union to be in serious danger. He believes the time for a violent rupture to be at hand, and warns us of the north to prepare for it. He tells the Republican Members of Congress to arm themselves, and also that those members from the South are coming armed to bullied! This, and much more stuff equally simple and incendiary, is the text in the Commercial's Washington letter of Saturday.

It is possible that danger threatens the Union; it comes from just such sources as the editor of the Commercial. They are the contributors to that kind of sentiment which is a dangerous element in the society; they are of those who prepare the public mind for the worst condition of things possible, and by virtue of a position which is presumed to give them correct information upon matters of grave import, they are unfortunately received by a class of strong souls as veritable shrieks of the spirit. They are merely the representatives of an element, virtuous or vicious as the case may happen to be. The "strong" sentiments we are considering have, we fear, to hope, been played on by the "sound and fury" of men of like character, and he is playing upon the readers. The more credulous of them are countless preparing themselves for the worst; and we may expect a brisk trade in revolvers to ensue.

We have too much faith in the good sense of the Representatives of the American people, now assembled as the servants of the government, to believe for a moment that any considerable number of them will, under any circumstances which may arise in the future, resort to a dissolution of the Union and accept the consequences of such a violent demonstration. We believe that a decent command of men, facing the face of Incendiarism in the Capitol of the National Union, will be found, unlike the Commercial's clique, to have no fear for the permanency of the General Government. We deprecate alike the threats of the House of Representatives and the mischievous declarations written and published about it. Sensible men might not ignore what little propensity there may be in such harum-scarum fright-writing.

Tobacco Trade.

The following statistics, in regard to the tobacco trade, is taken from the Almanac of the Wholesale Tobacco Trade of the United States:

Through City of Ohio [illegible] this market—[illegible] as large—last, than [illegible] than last year. Our receipts have been about 5,000 cases less than last year. The [illegible] as we [illegible] it would have in our Semi-Annual [illegible]. Take it all in all, it has been a very unfavorable crop. It has run largely to a common class of fillers, while the remainder has badly gone above medium Wrapper, with only occasionally a crop of strictly fine. The trade of our market have been, in some respects, very different from last year, especially as to Fat Stems and common grades Fillers. At that time, there was much demand at full prices for such; now we have but little call, and it meets with no sale for the reason, we presume, that many of the Cigars, which used such, have retired from the business in consequence of the very low prices of low grades Smoking. Germans and Russians have dragged all the season, with a gradual downward tendency in prices. Choice selections have been in request all the season, and are still so, at satisfactory prices. We give you the prices as quoted [illegible] the season, and now:

Fillers, common to good, ... [illegible]
Wrappers, " " ..... [illegible]
" good to choice, ... [illegible]
Crops around, ... [illegible]

At these last quotations we are selling a good deal of seed leaf, more however privately than at auction, while occasionally a choice lot brings outside figures. Into the depressed state of the cigar trade, the scarcity of money, and the idea that has taken hold of the minds of the buyers, that there is still much old stock in the country, yet to come, all added to the fact that a large new crop is nearly ready for the market, keeps up a constant contention between buyer and seller as to price, and sales are made with but little satisfaction to either party as is always the case in a falling market.

There is unquestionably still much stock in the country, and it would dispel all uncertainty on the subject of the amount, and do much to steady prices, if it were all in the market. Wisdom, we think, suggests such a course, as at home it is subject to many casualties, as fire, and such risks which but slight, if any chance of loss, while here it is insured against the first, and might be placed to the satisfaction of owners. In the absence of anything better, we would advise this course, and give you data, following, upon which you can base a calculation as to the time when you might expect sales.

No. cases rec'd during year ..... [illegible]
" " sold since Jan. 1st ..... [illegible]
on hand ..... [illegible]
In Warehouses and city sale, ... [illegible]
" hands of jobbers, ... [illegible]
" consumers, ... [illegible]

Our sales have been 380 cases per month. The season is at hand when we sell double the quantity of any other portion of the year, say, 600 per month, which will consume the stocks in our market in two months; add, say 1000 yet to come, and we will have a supply but for four months. In addition to the foregoing we will simply add, do not force sales with a good deal of old stock still unsold, and a large new one to be affected by such a course, it is not wise.

Our information relative to the new crop is [illegible] but we are satisfied that the country of Ohio will be at least equal to the last year, and the Indiana crop much larger. The quality is irregular; in some sections it is large and fine, in others but little better than the last. We have heard some complaints of houses burning, in the damp weather in October, and latterly of frost. As it is coming in slowly, there is yet much danger from the November freezes, that have usually, heretofore, made so much Fat stems. As to the disposition of this crop, we would advise that more than ordinary care be taken in its handling, and that it be put away in sacks as soon as dry, to insure its going through all its changes in proper order, and that it be kept in bags till the wants of the manufacturers call for it. This latter may not be good advice, for the first certainly is, for you have usually been very careless in the preparation of your crops for market, and have suffered from it, in quality with other tobaccos that sell, but no rivals exist, but for this very reason. Our advice is based upon the fact that it cannot be used for months to come, and until that time arrives there is an ample supply in most of the markets. In our own, a fair one, and in New York a large one, in the hands of unwilling holders.—Hence to push it in, injures the price of both old and new. Then, too, if you hold it yourself, you will be more apt to take such pains with it, as you do not when you expect an early sale, which will make it all the more valuable when you do offer it.

The experiences of the past seasons has gone far to demonstrate to the tobacco growers of the Miami Valley, that they must have Cigars to market. To sell at the shed is all very well for those who can do so; and would probably be the best if these buyers would take all the crop; but when they take but a fourth or a third at most, and this the choice, leaving you to hunt another market for the larger portion of it, the reputation of which they have so much injured by their selection, that an inferior price must be taken in consequence; it is very clear, that though they may pay an extra price, which they do not always do, the average will be found to be much below the real value of the crop. It is equally clear that if each and every grower were to ship his crop to this market, which is convenient and near to him, that these very buyers would follow it here, where they would find our resident buyers, and a great number of consumers, which would make a rivalry that would ensure an immediate sale, and full prices for every possession on arrival. One year's trial will establish the correctness of these views, and build up for you your own market. Try it.
