INDIANS AT CHUTES.

Their Music Described as Wild and Crude, Pleasing the Freakish.

Constance E. Skinner, a reporter of the Los Angeles Examiner contributes an article to that paper in reference to the engagement being played at the "Chutes" by the Phoenix Indian school band. Constance seems to have either a very finely cultivated ear for music or an innate prejudice against Indians from the way she writes of the wild, crude element of the playing of the band. Her notice follows:

Lo, the poor Indian, magnified by a score and armed with all sorts and conditions of brass blow pipes, is generating music at the Chutes this week. Lo and his brethren are from the United States school at Phoenix, Arizona. They are in care of a white man, who acts as interpreter and conductor, both.

The little dusky boys are clad in gray uniforms, and in all things conform to the conventional or "white" standard of orchestral propriety. They attempt some ambitious things in music such as the "Carmen" fantasia and "Hiawatha," "Laughing Water" and "Anona, My Sweet Indian Maid," are conspicuous in their repertoire, but the musical feature really is "When the Roses Bloom Again," which is played duetto fashion, one theme by the band and the other by two little brown band men stationed behind the ostrich cage, blowing cornets for all they are worth.

At the close of the program four boys dressed in their native garb rush out amid war whoops and pistol shots and dance a "wild, wooly west" genuinely Indian cotillion, which looks very like the sun dance that the Orpheum biograph gave us recently. It is the one bit of real picturesqueness shown by the boys for primarily they are civilized, citizenized conventionalized Indian replicas of their teachers.

Their music is not like that of the Italians who raised a monument to art at the Chutes. It has a wild, crude element in it that harmonizes well with the roaring of Ben Wallace and the mad baby scream of the panther. It seems remarkable that these boys, unmusical (or unmelodic, perhaps one should say) as they are, should play as well as they do. They are taking well at the Chutes with an audience that loves the novel and freakish.

Between tunes the little Indians scamper over the grounds, through all the side shows with wild coyote barks of delight or bask in speechless wonder in the basilisk glare of the untamable Wallace.

ADDITIONAL LOCAL AND NEWS BRIEFLETS

Miss Hannah Sullivan, formerly in the employ of Mrs. F. M. Murphy, as housekepeer, died July 7 at Colorado Springs.

The old lodge Fraternal Brotherhood had a public installation of officers on Monday night at which the following were installed for the ensuing term: Mrs. Annie Henry, president; Harry Haskins, vice president; Mrs. Sarah J. Merritt, treasurer; J. R. McNaughton, secretary; Mrs. Cora Geimer, chaplain; Roland Mosher, sergeant-at-arms; Frank Bernal, inside door keeer; Mrs. W. H. Merritt, outside door keeper; Dr. Smith, physician; Mrs. Calles, organist. The installation ceremony was followed by a dance and by the serving of refreshments by the ladies. The attendance was large and the evening was thoroughly enjoyed by all present as all Fraternal Brotherhood social affairs are.

A man came in from Mint valley yesterday and stated that the frost killed all his garden truck out there the night before. In speaking of this to A. J. Pickerell, he said that on the morning of July 4 a sheet of thin ice formed on the bucket of water at his home, Hassayampa district, twelve miles from Prescott.—Courier. The driver of one of the delivery wagons in Prescott called the attention of a Journal-Miner scribe to the above cold weather story and said it was mild compared to his experience this morning. He had occasion to deliver some goods in West Prescott and drove over ice four inches thick on Granite creek. It had probably dropped from the rear end of an ice wagon.

Monday morning about five oclok, while delivering his papers, Tommy Robinson found the body of a man lying on the ground near the blacksmith shop of F. G. Brecht, and reported the find to the officers. Justice of the Peace Talbot was notified and called a coroner's jury together and examined the remains when they were removed to Logan's undertaking parlors. The man proved to be James Crossman, a timberman and pumpman who had arrived here some five weeks ago from New Mexico. Since coming here he had been drinking heavily and was also afflicted with lung trouble. His drinking and dissipation brought on hemorrhage of the lungs and in one of these spells he passed away sometime during the early hours of Monday morning. Nothing was known of his relatives and he was buried by the county. He appeared to be about 55 years of age.

C. Douglas Brown, an old time Arizonan, returned to Prescott on Sunday evening after an absence of ten years during which time he has resided in remote parts of the world. Going from here to his former home in Edinburg, Scotland, he remaind there for some time and then went to the island of Ceylon where he had a brother engaged in business and remained there for three years. Mr. Brown came to America in 1870 from Australia and remained in this country twenty-four years, the greater portion of which was spent in Arizona. He served a term as assessor of this county and also served a term in the territorial legislature. He was one of the founders of the firm of Brown Bros., which has been so successfully conducted by his brother, W. T. Brown, and with whom he is visiting. Like every old Prescottite who has been away from the place for some time, Mr. Brown is impressed with the substantial appearance of new Prescott, as well as with the growth which has been made since he left here. Since his arrival he has been kept busy shaking hands with his old friends. He will remain for some time, probably for a couple or three months. The Journal-Miner had the pleasure of a call from him on Tuesday.
