JUDGE SEAY'S EULOGY ON GOV. ALLEN.

When the bill to appropriate $1000 for the removal of the Allen monument from New Orleans to Baton Rouge came up in the House Judge Seay delivered the following eulogy on the late Governor Henry W. Allen:

As one of the few members of this House, Mr. Speaker, who enjoyed the personal friendship of Henry Watkins Allen I deem it appropriate to offer a few remarks on an occasion so interesting as this.

The object of this bill is to locate a final resting place for the remains of one of Louisiana's most illustrious sons, in the spot which is the most appropriate for them. It was in this vicinity he formed his earliest and most enduring friendships. In this building he rendered his first service to the State.—Almost in sight is the battle-field on which he poured out his blood so copiously in defense of his people and received those wounds which transferred him from the field to a station which he was destined to so eminently adorn. When his body was brought from the distant land in which his life was ended, it was deposited in a New Orleans cemetery, since Baton Rouge having ceased to be the capital, the fitness of his burial here was not so apparent. But now that the government has been restored to its former seat, the appropriateness of the removal is admitted, and those who have so tenderly watched over his tomb for so many years now cheerfully surrender their sacred trust. There may be something of superstition in the tender care we bestow on the spot which holds the ashes of those we love and honor.—But the sentiment is well nigh universal. It is entwined in all religions and blended with all mythologies. If it serves no other purpose it at least continually brings to our mind the virtues of those who have gone before us, even though we know their bodies have mingled with the dust. It is fitting that the people of Louisiana should honor the memory of this, her favorite son. He labored earnestly to promote her welfare and wore out his life in his efforts to serve his people.—Those of us who knew him in early years, though we appreciated his many noble qualities, yet we had not then risen to a due conception of that greatness which opportunity was to so fully develop. When first elected to this House he at once took rank as a leading and influential member. But it was the late disastrous war which more fully developed his rare powers and displayed them in their brightest light. His devotion to the Southern cause amounted almost to fanaticism. His courage in the battlefield arose to sublimity. Let his men who survive the bloody contest recall it to memory. At Shiloh, in the hottest of the fight, where the bullets were flying thick and fast, and whole companies decimated, as the line was almost ready to waver, he restored confidence by standing firm and exclaiming, "My men, this is about as good a place to die as any other on the whole field." At Baton Rouge, when he was stricken down he still cheered his men and rallied them to the charge.

But brave and chivalrous as he was, as a soldier, it was his civil government of Louisiana that brought out all his powers, and it is this on which his fame will mainly rest. He was deeply impressed with the responsibility of his trying position. His former buoyancy and cheerfulness of spirit gave way to a settled seriousness, amounting almost to gloom. He set to work vigorously to repair all the waste places around him. He organized the military and equipped his troops. He provided for the helpless who remained at home. He distributed food and medicine and clothing to those who needed them. He published readers and spelling books for the education of the children. He made his boast that he would put a pair of cotton cards into the hands of every woman in the State, that they might be clothed by their own hands in contempt of Federal blockades and embargoes. So faithfully and earnestly did he perform his duties in the last days of the Confederacy that the General Assembly virtually turned over to him the State government as perpetual dictator, with the simple injunction of the Roman Senate to the Roman consul, to "take care that the commonwealth should suffer no harm." And this man, with almost unlimited authority, and with the handling of all the revenues of the State, left his chair, when the final collapse came, without sufficient means to take him to his chosen asylum in a distant land. Well may we place his monumental where it shall serve as a constant reminder of services so great and virtues so eminent. He has thus found his final resting place in this spot, redolent of his presence and suggestive of his fame. This hall has resounded with the echoes of his eloquence in the civil service of the State. These grounds were the objects of his tender care and of his refined taste. The tender twigs which have grown into this beautiful grove were planted and irained by his careful hand. He planted a laurel from which might have been woven a wreath to adorn his brow as a token of his civic triumphs. He planted an oak which might have furnished a crown as a reward for his victories on the field. He planted no cypress tree, the emblem of death; no weeping willow, the emblem of tears. In those halcyon days, within his beloved circle, there was no death. In those happy days, within his cheerful circle, there were no tears. But now that he is to be laid away to rest in this beautiful spot, consecrated by his presence and made sacred by his labors, let the women of Louisiana, whom he loved so well, plant on one side of his tomb a cypress twig, which, as it raises its majestic trunk and spreads its funeral foliage, shall stand as a living memento that "All that's bright must fade, The brightest still the fleetest."

Let them plant on the other side a weeping willow, which, as it forms its slender twigs and unfolds its drooping leaflets, shall typify his beloved mother State, standing like another Niobe, shedding perpetual tears over the loss of the dearest of her children.

On motion of Councilman Rosenthal,

Resolved, That the Town bell shall be rung for the following purposes only, viz: At 12 o'clock M. and 9 o'clock P. M. of each day, alarms of fire, meetings of the two fire companies and public mass meetings, and any person or persons who shall ring the bell for other than the purposes above named, (unless with the consent of the Mayor,) shall pay a fine of $2.50 for each offence, and in default of payment of said fine shall be imprisoned in the city prison for 48 hours.

On motion of Councilman McGinnis,

Whereas, the people of the Alexandria Ward having, at an election held on the 21st day of May, 1884, declared that no whisky or other intoxicating beverages shall be sold in the said Ward; therefore be it

Resolved, That any person or persons who shall sell or offer for sale whisky or other intoxicating beverages within the corporate limits of the City of Alexandria, La., shall, upon conviction thereof, pay a fine of not less than ten ($10) dollars nor more than fifty ($50) dollars for each and every offence, and in default of payment of said fine shall be imprisoned in the city prison for 48 hours.

Resolved further, That this law shall apply to the keeper or owner of any bar on a steamboat or other water craft landing at any of the landings of the said City of Alexandria, La.

W. C. MCGIMSEY, Mayor.
A. B. RACHAL, Secretary.

—READERS of Harper's Weekly since the Republicans nomination are becoming satisfied that if the heart of Nast is in his works, there must be something wrong with his head. Heretofore he has been always bright, but now one of the leading traits manifested in his work is stupidity. A recent Blaine cartoon represents Reid of the Tribune pinning a shirt upside down on Mr. Blaine, but on a bet made, not one of five men could tell what the picture meant. Nast has lost his kismet.—[Exchange.]

—"THE proof of the pudding is in the eating," so says the old adage, and so the proof of the value of a medicine is the opinion of those who have used it. Thos. Bass, Sr., Steelville, says, "I have used Prickly Ash Bitters in my family for 2 years for ailments of the kidneys, liver and bowels, and find there is no remedy equal to it."
