The Telegraph's Xmas Greeting.

With this issue we give you a Christmas eve edition and greet the readers of the TELEGRAPH, one and all, big and little and wish them a merry, merry Christmas. We hang up our little stockings and would ask contributions from all in the way of subscriptions, advertising, job work and your best "good wishes," and to use the language of the Picayune paragraphist "darn them" if we do not.

May everybody have a happy time and the little folks especially, for it only comes once a year.

Merry Christmas.

The supper given by our Jewish friends, who took advantage of the opportunity afforded by the Masquerade ball Tuesday night, was well patronized and creditably so, as the fund raised goes to complete their cemetary fence.

A colored man was caught in the machinery of the steam gin on the Ingleside plantation and was seriously injured on Wednesday morning. These accidents are of frequent occurence and laborers cannot be too careful how they handle steam machinery.

The Masquerade Ball.

This ball, given by the young gentlemen of Monroe Tuesday evening, was unquestionably the best of the season and surpassed anything of the kind ever witnessed in Monroe. Preparations were made in ample time, good music procured and the weather was exceptionably favorable. The attendence was large and costumes, "rich, rare racy" were in abundance. Orphans sweet that challenged your charity and protecting care, were there, queens, princesses, countesses and vis-countesses, were represented. The aboriginees, who many years ago traversed this country in its primeval state and danced around council fires in times of peace and war, had their representative, too, and right loyal did lovely Pochahontas do it. King Cotton for once doffed his royal diadem, and the crown was worn, and the fleecy staple represented, gracefully, by a queen. Night—

"Fair oldest child of love, thou spotless night;
Empress of silence, and the queen of sleep;
Who with thy dark cheek's pure complexion,
Mak'st lovers' enamour'd of thy beauty," was personated, and so many were the knights that were enamoured that the scene was changed to

"A lively Masquerade of day."

Gay and winsome highland lasses claimed lots of ye noble lords attention and ye little peasant girls were just too lovely.

Dukes, lords and knights were there till you could not rest with their little tin swords by their sides. The Heathen Chinee was there alee samee and "for ways that are dark and tricks that are vain" they were peculiar. Many others in costumes humorous and rediculous furnished amusement for lookers on but we have not space to go into detail. On the whole the affair was a most enjoyable one and will be a precedent for many repetitions.

charged liberally here, and [illegible] trip for points above.

The Hanna left New Orleans Wednesday in place of the Fred A. Blanks, and is due up to-night.

The Fred A. Blanks, owing to fog, and failing to get a crew at New Orleans, did not leave there until Thursday morning of last week. She arrived early Saturday evening, 20 hours late, but, nevertheless, making good time. Her crew "bounced" her at Trenton and she was compelled to hire a local crew, to whom she paid 50 and 75 cents per hour for loading; she having upwards of 2,000 bales cotton there which had to go forward.

HOWARD AND WEST POINT.

The enemies of West Point may rejoice over the assignment of Gen. O. O. Howard to that institution, called a military department in order to provide a command for an overstock of Generals. With a supply of Whittakers, such as he will be likely to get after the Republican majority in the next House manufactures a number of colored members by unseating white representatives from the Southern States, he can soon reconstruct West Point on the plan of "Howard University," near Washington.

Gen. Howard bought the land for that so-called university, modestly named after himself, and had the buildings erected, out of money illegally and corruptly diverted from the Freedmen's Bureau, of which he was then Commissioner. It was a swindle in every part, as was abundantly proven before a committee of the House in the Forty-first Congress, in spite of the efforts of a whitewashing Republican majority to suppress testimony, and to distort evidence actually given.

An organized ring of thieving philanthropists and politicians, whose whole capital was pretended friendship for the colored man, not only stole the black soldiers' bounty land and money through the Freedmen's Bureau, but they robbed and ruined the Freedman's Bank, in which the hard savings of thousands of confiding black men, women, and children were deposited. These people were cheated with Howard's professions and promises. They had too much faith in his cant about their race.

This band of thieves traded upon religion, philanthropy, and humanity, and assumed the special guardianship of the colored people. In the days of reconstruction they may be said to have shaped all the political legislation relating to the negro. Enormous appropriations in money were made for the Freedmen's Bureau, for salaries of Assistant and Sub-Assistant Commissioners, stationery and [illegible] theories," and the "intelligent rule of the masses." It sounds a little strange to hear a Pennsylvania Senator demanding a revision of the tariff for the benefit of the public; and yet that is precisely what Mr. Wallace means, when he declares for "a thorough inquiry into taxation for revenue and its readjustment upon a basis just to every interest and to all the people."

Senator Wallace does not believe the Democratic party can die while it stands for the rights of the people, at it is bound to do by the very law of its existence. "The hour for its triumph," he concludes, "will have come, when it boldly asserts its true theories and ignores the blandishments of money, monopoly, and corrupt power. He whose interests, judgment, or teachings are adverse to the rule of the masses, will join its enemies; but in his room it will recruit scores of those in whose interest it strikes, or who respect its attitude and detest strong government. The future of the Democratic party is the future of the republic."

THE KILLING OF DR. JONES, IN CARROLL.

[From the N. O. States, 24th.]

Jacques A. Gla, senator from Carroll parish, was yesterday evening seen by a reporter of the States, at his house, and questioned about the killing of Dr. W. P. Jones, editor of the North Louisiana Republican, on the night following the day of election.

Mr. Gla, who by the way is a colored man, and a Republican, said:

"I reside on a plantation, three miles outside the town of Providence. On the day preceding election day and on the morning of that day I went into Providence, and there learned that a misunderstanding, arising from a misconstruction of words spoken by B. H. Lanier, had taken place between him and Powell, the sheriff of the parish, who is a Democrat.

"No disturbance of any kind was noticeable in the town the next morning and the election was going on very quietly. All through the day I received messages stating that everything was quiet in the town and that no disturbance occured.

WEAVER AND SPARKS.

Late Washington dispatches are inflamed with the sanguinary hues of war. First there was a slight set-to between Wood of New York and Mills of Texas. That tapered off smoothly and harmlessly. But, shortly thereafter, a second engagement occurred between Weaver of Iowa (you all do know him) and Sparks of Illinois:

"Mr. Weaver made a humorous speech, arraigning the Democratic party for inconsistency on financial questions, and the discussion soon drifted into a noisy and irregular dispute as to which party was responsible for the demonetization of silver, and which party should have credit for its remonetization.

"A personal controversy soon sprang up between Messrs. Sparks and Weaver as to the latter's veracity.

"Mr. Weaver declared no one could insult him intentionally by ascribing falsehood to him without feeling the force for his (Weaver's) right arm. (Laughter and uproar.)

"Mr. Sparks replied: What I said was that you were stating what was not true and that you were wanting in the qualities of a gentleman.

"Mr. Weaver—(Now thoroughly angry and excited) I denounce the gentleman personally as a liar on the floor of this house.

"Mr. Sparks—(Equally excited.) You are a scoundrel and a villain.

"Mr. Weaver thereupon (amid great uproar) left the place where he was standing and advanced menacingly towards Mr. Sparks, who, in his turn moved towards Mr. Weaver, but both were immediately surrounded by members, who prevented them getting to close quarters and made them put on their coats, which each was in the act of taking off as he advanced into the arena.

"Of course the greatest confusion and disorder prevailed on the floor and in the galleries, but in the midst of it the speaker took the chair and called upon the sergeant-at-arms to do his duty. Just then, however, there was nothing particular to be done by that official, as the combatants had been removed by their respective friends, and there was no danger of their assaulting each other. After the disorder had subsided, Mr. Covert resumed the chair. The committee rose and the house adjourned."
