THE REQUISITE FORCE MUST BE PROVIDED.

It becomes painfully apparent more and more each day that as our campaign against the Filipinos is being conducted it is an utter failure and is making us ridiculous not only before the world but before the Filipinos also. Mr. McKinley is in no wise to blame for this. He has done all that the resources at his command allowed, but he is to blame for participating in the studied attempt that has been going on for months past to bamboozle the American people and conceal from them the real situation in the Philippine islands. It has been persistently represented to us for months that we were making great advances in subjugating the islanders and that it was only a question of a few months before all of them submitted to our authority and peace reigned everywhere there. Upon the contrary it is perfectly evident now that the real question in Luzon is whether the islanders will not rule us and that we hold nothing but Manila and have to fight desperately every day to hold that.

Mr. McKinley, like all men of his nature, has thought the way to deal with a situation of this sort was to temporize and let the real facts of the case come out by degrees to the people and by pursuing this course he has not helped the situation at Manila in the least, while he has seriously impaired his influence with the American people, whereas, had he taken the part of a bold, straightforward man—of a statesman—he would long ago have told the people just what the difficulties in the case were, he would have appealed to their public spirit to rally to the support of their government, and he would have had a practically unanimous people ready to place all the resources of the nation at his command to compel the Filipinos to submit to an orderly government.

It is not yet too late for Mr. McKinley to redeem himself, and we most earnestly pray that he will at once change his course, inform us of the exact state of affairs in the Philippines, and ask the American people whether they will carry on the war in a manner commensurate with their dignity and their power, or whether they will allow the gurrilla warfare now prevailing there to continue to the disgust of the world and the derision of the islanders.

Mr. McKinley makes a great mistake in supposing that the American people look upon this as his fight—as a contest in which his personal fortunes at the next Republican National Convention are involved. This is not their view of the case at all. They entirely recognized that the logic of events forced the Philippine islands upon us and that we can no more shirk our responsibility to establish order there than we can fail to guard the people of the plains and force the savage Indian tribes to lead orderly lives. It is a burden which has been cast upon us by Providence, and we have to face it and carry it whatever the outcome may be. All the American people recognize this as the true state of the case, and however disagreeable it may be to so recognize it the people do so in fact, and they are ready to stand up to their responsibilities.

It is useless to falter and trifle about this matter. An army of 150,000 men is necessary for the subjugation of the Philippines, and the President should say so to the people and ask for it at once. It will be forthcoming.

A LESSON FROM NEW YORK.

The New York Sun pays us the compliment to print the following at the head of its editorial columns:

"These remarks are made by The Times, of Richmond, in Virginia, a paper of so-called 'gold Democratic' proclivities:

"The Sun has been doing its best to rally the free silver forces in the Democratic party, to keep that question alive, and to discourage anything like a compromise between the gold Democrats and the silver Democrats. Nothing would please the Republicans better than for the Democrats to conduct the campaign of 1900 on the same lines that the campaign of 1896 was conducted."

We have not tried and we are not trying to rally any sort of the Democratic forces, and we are very sure that there are no such forces which would rally at our call. We have declared, however, and do now repeat, that we hold "the silver forces" in far higher respect than we do the "gold Democrats," for these are afraid to express their convictions, and are intriguing now to get the Democratic National Convention to dodge the whole question in order to give them a pretext for supporting its ticket. They are cowards; the others are not liable to the same charge.

As to the Republican party, it is very unwise if it does not prefer to fight cowardly evasion than to battle against courageous conviction.

And thus does the Sun Continue to coddle the free silver Democrats and attempt to rally them. Democrats will do well to make a note of his. The Sun is not apt to give the Democratic party winning advice. It says that the Republican party prefers to fight cowardly evasion rather than to battle against courageous conviction. The Sun means by this to say that the financial plank of the platform of 1892 was a "cowardly evasion," while the financial plank of the platform of 1896 was "courageous conviction." But the Democrats will do well to remember that their candidate for the Presidency upon the platform of 1892 was elected, while their candidate for the Presidency upon the platform of 1896 was defeated. Naturally, the Republican party and the Sun would prefer to fight the battle of 1896 over again, for they know full well that in such a contest they would win.

We shall not bandy epithets with the Sun, we have something better to do. We remark, however, in reply to the charge against the gold Democrats of cowardice, that there never was a bolder and a more straightforward declaration than the Indianapolis platform upon which the gold Democrats stood in 1896. It was the Republican party that showed cowardice. That party did not meet the financial question in a courageous and manly way. It did not declare for the gold standard, but dodged the whole question behind a meaningless declaration about international bimetallism, which deceived many. Yet the Sun then said noting about "cowardly evasion." The gold Democras, on the other hand came out boldly and unequivocally for the gold standard. They have never attempted to dodge and they are not dodging now. For our part we would love to see the Democratic party plant itself squarely upon the Indianapolis platform. But as that cannot be The Times has belen honestly endeavoring in a good tempered discussion with several of its Democratic contemporaries to arrive at some fair adjustment of differences that shall preserve party harmony without compromise of principle. The Times had asserted that it was willing, in the interest of harmony, to accept any Democratic platform that had been adopted previously to the Chicago Convention of 1896. In the course of the discussion The Times was asked by one of the most pronounced free silver papers in Virginia if, in case the platform of 1892 should be re-adopted in 1900 with Mr. Bryan as its nominee, it would give Mr. Bryan its support. To that question The Times promptly replied that if Mr. Bryan were nominated upon that platform and would promise to stand thereon in all sincerity, The Times would cheerfully and cordially support him for the Presidency. If that be "cowardly evasion," make the most of it. If that be "cowardly evasion," then a number of the most pronounced free silver papers in Virginia are equally guilty with The Times, for they have expressed themselves as being willing to accept the platform of 1892 in lieu of the platform of 1896. The Sun intimates that The Times is anxious to affiliate with the Democratic party. In one sense that is true. The Times is a Democratic newspaper, and believes with all its might in true Democratic principles, as it is opposed to the creed of Republicanism. The Times believes that the very existence of this republic depends upon the maintenance of Democratic principles as pronounced by Thomas Jefferson, and as exemplified and defended since his day by the party which he founded. The Times believes that the Democratic party is the only thing that stands between Socialism on the one hand and monarchy on the other hand. The Times believes that the Democratic party is the only party that represents popular government, American independence and manhood suffrage. We desire, above all things, to see the Democratic party preserved in its integrity, and it would be indeed a day of rejoicing in our household if we could see the party reunited and rehabilitated in 1900 with its old-time banners waving, with its mighty Democratic hosts armed with Jeffersonian principles, and arrayed for a battle to the finish with the party which the Sun has recently adopted.

Hitherto are we working, and we are not to be deterred by the sneers of the opposition. Indeed, it is to this end that we have reproduced the Sun's ill-natured article. We call upon our contemporaries in Virginia to study the attitude of this New York Republican paper, and see what it means. The Sun knows full well that if only the gold Democrats and the silver Democrats may be kept apart, the Republican party will have an easy victory. It knows, on the other hand, that if the party shall be reunited upon the platform of 1892, it will, at least, be a most formidable foe.

AN HONEST BALLOT.

A froend has sent us an election ticket which his father voted in the presidential election of 1840. We reproduce it as well as we can, as follows:

On the back of the ballot the name of the voter is plainly written in ink. Our correspondent says that this is his idea of an honest ballot. It is our idea also. The ballot was conceived in honesty. It was designated to give the voter an opportunity to express his choice of candidates at the polls, and everything was made so plain that there could be no mistake that the person whose name appeared on the back had voted for the Harrison and Tyler electors.

Our elections in the South were always fair and honest and above board until the negro was forced into politics.

CURRENT COMMENT.

A North Carolina paper proposes to get out a mid-summer number which it claims will be specially anti-trust. "We are going to pour a broadside into the enemy," it says, "and we shall use guns of the largest calibre." And our contemporary should have added, "now is the time to subscribe."

The Lynchburg News reproduces from these columns our recent tribute to Senator Daniel, in order, as it says, that its readers may see what is thought of Virginia's best beloved son by a public journal which often differs with him in his opinions. And adds:

"The Times is quite right in its estimate of Major Daniel; and we may add that another reason why the people of Virginia honor him above any other public man is the fact that he is thoroughly honest in politics. He never takes a position, right or wrong, that he does not believe in or fears to defend. He never 'schemed' in his life, nor ever adopted a questionable means of self- aggrandizement. As we remember to have heard him indignantly exclaim at the last Democratic State Convention, when his attention was called to certain intriguery: 'I never in all my life traded my vote for man or measure; and, so help me God, I never shall.'"

Men like Senator Daniel are a great comfort to us as giving us the inner consciousness that we are not altogether biased by partisanry. It is a hard thing for a man to know himself. He may honestly think that he is fair and unprejudiced when the contrary is quite true of him. But we admire Senator Daniel and men like him quite as sincerely as we admire honest men with whom we are entirely agreed on questions of public policy. Therefore, we say that we find great comfort in our admiration of Virginia's silver tongued orator and statesman.

VIRGINIA TOPICS.

The South Boston News figures it out that the editor of the Danville Register wants Congressman Swanson to be Governor of Virginia, so that the editor of the Register may stand for Congress in the Fifth District. Hence the editor of the Registry does not want Congressman Jones to be Governor.

Halifax now has an organization in the interest of good roads. A convention of the people will be held at Houston on Monday next in furtherance of the movement.

The Orange Virginian notes the accidental death of the little son of Mr. Marshall Hopkins, near Nasons, in that county. Two boys, one of them a brother of the deceased child, were throwing a ball through the hall of the house when the little brother entered the door. The ball struck him over the heart. He turned and ran to his father, who was standing a short distance away, and fell dead at his feet.

The Suffolk Herald thinks that one of the most desirable home products is the boy born on the farm, raised on the farm, and so well educated that he realizes that the greatest happiness in life is to be had in sticking by the farm. Why should a manly farmer's lad want to become a silly city dude?

FRESH GOSSIP FROM GOTHAM

A Secret Marriage and Now Divorce Proceedings.

DRINKS HERSELF TO DEATH.

Young Sloan and His Wife are Not Enjoying Their Honeymoon—A Lad Makes An Interesting Discovery.

NEW YORK, June 23.—Special.—Hear the strange case of Arthur Porter. He was reared by Mr. and Mrs. James Northrope, of North Bergen, and up to a little while ago supposed that they were his parents. One day he overheard Mrs. Northrope tell a lady that his mother was Sloan Ellie. This aroused his suspicion, but he said nothing, supposing that when he attained his majority the secret would be disclosed. He became twenty-one years of age, but still heard nothing from his foster parents. He then determined to learn the secret for himself. There was one room in the house which was always locked, and he came to the conclusion that in that room the secret was to be found. One day Northrope set him to work painting the house. He managed to slip into the locked room through a window, and there in a trunk he found papers from which he learned that he was Arthur Porter and that he had been adopted by the Northropes when he was only two and a half years old. He also discovered that the Treasurer of Kings county had in his possession $1,850, which was to be paid to him when he should reach his majority. He made a copy of the papers and left home, having engaged a lawyer in Jersey City to obtain his legacy. Northrope then declared that the young man was insane, and proceedings were instituted in the Court of Chancery in Jersey City. The jury decided, however, that Porter was sane and capable of managing his own affairs. He will, therefore, come into possession of his little fortune.

REMARKABLE DIVORCE SUIT.

May C. Weil is suing her husband, Henry C. Weil, a wealthy broker and a member of the Stock Exchange, for a separation on the ground of abandonment. She has been granted alimony of $200 a month and counsel fee of $300. The story is a most remarkable one. The couple were married in January, 1898, and on May 16, 1899, another ceremony was performed by a Catholic priest at Mrs. Weil's request, she being a Catholic and her husband a Hebrew. For this reason their marriage was kept a secret and Weil occupied apartments on Fifth avenue, being known there as a bachelor, while he was secretly living with his wife on Forty-sixth street.

Weil says that the whole cause of the trouble was his wife's infatuation for Frank H. Doane. He asserts in his affidavit that on May 14th Doane called at his house at his request, when Mrs. Weil openly declared her love for Doane and the visitor expressed his love for her. He says that his wife then insisted that she should leave him and go with Doane, but that he finally persuaded her to remain at home. On May 23d they went to the theatre and Doane came in and took a seat near by. Weil says that his wife at once became greatly excited, and between acts carried on a conversation with Doane. After the performance he and his wife had supper, reaching their home after midnight. They found Doane waiting at the door and Mrs. Weil again declared her love for him. Weil further asserts that his wife then went into the house, changed her dress, came back and went off with Doane to a Broadway restaurant, where they remained until about 2 o'clock. He waited for them and then followed them to the St. Cloud Hotel, where they both entered. He afterwards received a letter from his wife saying that she would not return to him.

Mrs. Weil's side of the story is that Doane was her husband's friend and that he compelled her to accept his society, even when she protested. She declares that her husband's conduct caused her to go into nervous prostration, and that she declared her love for Doane and wrote the letter above mentioned through pique at Weil's constant neglect. Weil denies that he abandoned his wife.

A FAMILY OF INEBRIATES.

Mrs. Clara T. Hewitt, a wealthy widow, who resided on west Forty-fifth street, recently committed suicide by drinking herself to death. She was an English woman and lived in London until about two years ago, when she came to New York by invitation of her sister, Aggie de Forest. Miss De Forest was wealthy and told her sister that she proposed to enjoy her wealth while it lasted. Her idea of enjoyment was to drink whisky, and she drank until she died. Mrs. Hewitt then determined to follow her sister's example. When the doctor called to see her the other day she scolded her servant for having sent for him and declared to the doctor that she wanted to die. When the doctor told her that death was near she showed evident pleasure. Her servant, Josephine Swensen, says that Mrs. Hewitt's mother and sister had both drunk themselves to death and that it was fitting that she should go in the same way. Mrs. Hewitt had no relatives. It is said that in her last days she thought nothing of disposing of a pint of whisky per day.

THE PREACHER KNEW.

Frederick A. Hubbard, the lawyer through whom Perry Belmont and Mrs. Sloane arranged for their marriage, denies the statement made by Rev. Walter M. Barrows, who performed the ceremony, that he had been deceived. He declares that the preacher knew just what he was doing and that he received a fee of $500 for tying te knot.

William Wilson Sloan, Jr., the twenty-year-old Harvard student, who was to be chief usher at the marriage of Rose Lincoln Edwardes to a friend, but who eloped with the bride-elect and married her himself, is now in a peck of trouble. His father, a millionaire of Buffalo, has disinherited him, his mother disowns him and declares that he shall never have a cent of her money, and he now discovers that the college law which forbids the marriage of freshmen expels him from Harvard. Therefore the young people are not having the most delightful honeymoon imaginable.

THE CASE OF YOUNG CHASE.

Moses Fowler Chase, the young man from Indiana with a fortune of $1,000,000, who is detained in this city by his uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Duhme, of Cincinnati, is taking very little part in the interesting proceedings which his father has instituted, and seems to have very little control over his own affairs. Henry B. Probasco, the Cincinnati lawyer who was counsel for General Miles in the embalmed beef controversy, is here to represent the elder Chase, father of the boy. Mr. Probasco says that the boy's father has a fortune of his own and that his solicitude is entirely for his son's welfare. He says that the aunt is evidently very much attached to the young man but that she has made a mistake in thus spiriting him away from his father. Mr. Probasco called at the Waldorf-Astoria to have an interview with Mr. Duhme and young Chase by they declined to see him.

It is whispered in political circles that Richard Croker will probably return from his trip abroad the latter part of July, one month earlier than he expected, the reason therefor being the Sheehan revolt.

JUSTICE JOHN'S FOURTH.

He Will Entertain His Friends as Usual on That Day.

People who are shy on plans for the Fourth need not feel lonesome. Justice John will give his great daily matinee on the Fourth as usual. He himself hath said it.

The Great Dispenser announced it from the bench that the justice mill would grind that day as usual, and it is not unlikely that a few daylight pyrotechnics will be exhibited for the benefit of those who attend the show. The decorations for the White Chamber will be furnished by the Council Committee on Patriotic Observances.

The cases yesterday were few and of no great interest.

Martha Monroe, charged with stabbing Mayo Johnson was sent to the grand jury. It was a case of jealousy.

Eva Tyler, charged with stealing Maud Preston's wearing apparel, got thirty days.

N. C. Dooley, drunk, was dismissed with a warning.

Samuel Hill, a colored saloon keeper, was fined $5 for keeping his bar open after midnight Saturday night.

Stafford H. Arnold is charged with being drunk and beating his wife. Mrs. Arnold did not appear and Stafford offered to swear off for twelve months. An officer stated that the woman was full of bruises. There is no pity in Justice John's heart for the man who strikes a woman and Stafford was held pending investigation.

The other deed represents the transfer of property between the same parties at the northwest corner of Cary and Twentieth streets, 112x85 feet, for $9,500.

The following cases were tried in the Hustings Court before Judge S. B. Witt and a jury yesterday:
