M'CARTHY AGAIN THE FEATURE

however, he referred humorously to the question asked by Major Allen in the latter's speech: "What am I here for?"

"I know what I am here for," said Captain McCarthy. "I am here to discuss the wonderful possibilities for good which lie in an improved system of municipal government."

Subject Divided.

Dividing his subject of the "three kinds of Mayor," he named them as follows: "The kind of Mayor we have had," "the kind some people seem to desire" and "the kind we ought to have." In disposing of the first division of his subject he made a graceful hit, which appealed to the hearts of his hearers and set them to cheering enthusiastically.

"Owing to the distressing family affliction of His Honor, the Mayor," he said, "which detains him from public appearance at the bedside of his aged father, I pass the first head of my subject without discussing it, and take up the second."

His observations upon the "kind of Mayor some people seem to desire" were interesting to a degree, and he described him as a retired merchant, with ample means to entertain lavishly at his home and ready to do his duty in any line in which he might be capable, but who would rarely want to be worried with the cares and details of work relating to the real betterment of the city government.

"Does Richmond desire," he asked, "to substitute for the incumbent a man of this sort?" I don't think so, nor do I think this public interest is aroused for any such ignoble purpose."

"Mayor We Ought to Have."

"The modern Mayor; the Mayor we ought to have," he continued, "should be capable of filling nine-tenths of the offices in the City Hall.

"He should be able to criticise and improve the department and have the courage to undertake it if necessary.

"He should be able to write and speak intelligently in defense of his city and should have energy and common sense enough to surround himself with the ablest and best men in the community, combining with his own strength and force of character that of the best men in the Council. These qualifications briefly outlined would make in my judgment the well rounded, complete and useful Mayor."

"Anything less than this renders the Mayor less than he ought to be."

Coming to the value of votes, Captain McCarthy said that it was more important that the poor than that the rich should interest themselves in municipal government.

"The wealthy," he said, "may take care of themselves in troublous times, but it is the poor upon whom the evils of bad government fall most heavily."

Blessings of Education.

He contended that local government was more important in cities than national government, as it came so much closer home to the people. He referred to the "unspeakable blessings" conferred upon the people through the public schools, and declared in favor of affording the highest opportunity for public education.

Captain McCarthy here referred in stirring terms to the independence of his candidacy for Mayor, and in dealing with the subject he said, amid oft repeated cheering: "I am not running as the candidate of any class, clique, neighborhood, association, creed, locality, brotherhood or organization, except that grand and worthy organization, the Democratic people of the glorious old city of Richmond.

"I want it understood that I won't surrender one hair's breadth from any principle ingrained in my past life. On the other hand, I have no war to make upon any one. I expect to live and die on that platform, and if elected to the office of Mayor, I will be installed without the label of any man or set of men upon me, and with nothing to guide my official conduct save the charter and laws of our city and State and a clear conscience in the sight of God and man."

What Is Lacking.

The demonstration of approval which followed this utterance was long continued, and there was cheering and waving for some moments.

Proceeding, Captain McCarthy said the city government lacked "concentration," and "continuation," without an intelligent head to harmonize and concentrate the forces of government for good, there could be no permanent betterment, and on the subject of "continuation," he said the people should keep good men in the Council when once there.

"Present conditions will continue," he went on, "until you elect a Mayor with the character, energy and pacificatory disposition to harmonize the conflicting interests in your city government.

"I represent one department, and hardly that," he said, amid laughter. "The city attorney says I am not the head of a department. If I am not, what am I?" he asked, amid continued laughter.

"I am the only man in it, and though headless it may be, my department has been at work. I have done two things for which I deserve the gratitude of the people. One was to bring about a settlement of the aggravated debt question, and the other to insure the collection of the taxes due the city under the Constitution from the railroads."

As a Mild Offset.

"I say these things as a mild offset to the suggestion in some quarters that I am a reckless man. I have never been beaten in a fight I have undertaken for better municipal conditions, and all the councilmen in both branches are my friends."

Captain McCarthy created great merriment by saying that if all the supporters of his friend Hicks who were just waiting to vote for the erstwhile candidate would vote for him, the contest was already settled, and he urged those present to look to the future advancement and prosperity of the city by choosing a strong executive and intelligent councilman.

"Offices were intended as a reward for services," he said, and with outstretched hands, he declared: "I certainly do not want the faded votes of the mayoralty. I want to gather up material and make some honors of my own, and with the guiding help of this intelligent community, if elected, will make the office of Mayor one which any man might covet."

Urged Him On.

Captain McCarthy was about to stop here, but there was loud cries of "Go on," "Go on," and he declared that the effect of his two campaigns would never cease, until the children of the present generation had reaped the benefit.

He said he had raised the standard of the office, and if he could but fill it according to that standard, he would feel justly proud. If he failed in this, he would be willing to leave the State.

When Captain McCarthy resumed his seat there was long continued cheering, and when the meeting broke up, great crowds gathered upon the stage to shake his hand and to offer him their cordial support.

The meeting was perhaps the most successful yet held in the campaign.

The candidates for the Common Council and Board from the ward led off and spoke in the following order, each forcefully presenting his claims for the honor he seeks: Messrs Glenn, Hobson, Masurier, Pollock, Wallerstein and West, for the Council, and Mr. W. T. Dabney, for the Board.

Just as Mr. Dabney concluded, Major Otway S. Allen, his competitor, came upon the stage and was accorded a flattering reception, such as had just been given his predecessor. He promised continued faithful service if returned. He made a longer speech than any of the Council candidates, and went to some extent into his record of twelve years in the Board.

He believed he was entitled to re-election because he had protected the interests of the people in his long service.

A Sharp Retort.

When Major Allen was saying he had been fair to all interests, some one in the audience asked: "How did you vote on increasing the pay of laborers on the parks?"

"I voted no," was the quick reply. "There were only two of you, thank God," said the one in the audience, and in a second Major Allen declared amid great cheering that he had consistently voted against all increases in salaries and wages.

He referred in a biting manner to the questioner as "this man," and before the speaker had finished defending his course on this point, he was given quite an ovation.

He declared that unless a man in the Council was a "grafter," he had a hard road to travel, and then he discussed the recent salary raising business at some length, and he declared that he had fought it from start to finish.

CONTESTS IN EVERY WARD

Those Who Paid Up Their Assessments to Enter Primary.

The time for the aspirants to put up their fees and enter their names to be voted for in the municipal primary to be held on April 26th to nominate candidates for Mayor and Council expired at noon on yesterday, and with the exception of the seats in the board from Marshall, Clay and Jefferson Wards, where the incumbents have no opposition, there are contests for every place on the ticket.

Messrs. John Mann, Jr., Robert Whittet, Jr., and J. B. Wood are these fortunate aldermen, and they can already "read their titles clear" to four more years of service in the upper branch.

A large majority of the candidates had paid their fees prior to yesterday, and the task imposed on Chairman Doherty, Treasury Rector and Secretary Duke on the final day was not an onerous one.

The net results of the final entries are as follows:

Two candidates for Mayor at $150	$300
Fifteen candidates the Board at $15	225
Fifty-five candidates for Common Council at $10	550
Total amount received	$1,075

PUT IT UP CHEERFULLY.

Mayor Taylor and Captain Carlton McCarthy each paid an additional $50 to make up the $300 assessed against the office of Mayor, owing to the withdrawal of the other candidates. Had Mr. Hicks or Colonel Anderson remained in, the fee would have been $100 each. Messrs. Taylor and McCarthy had each previously put up $100.

There are fifty-five candidates running for the lower branch, and out of these only thirty-five can be chosen, each of the seven wards being entitled to five members of the body.

Out of the thirty-five present members of the Common Council, twenty-eight are standing for re-election, though many of them have been thrown into other wards than those they now represent by the new reapportionment scheme.

For this class are the following: Mr. Stein, from Jackson to Henry; Mr. Huber, from Lee to Henry; Mr. Peters, from Monroe to Henry; Messrs. Pollock, Teefey and Whalen, from Jackson to Madison; Messrs. Allen and Wiltshire, from Marshall to Jefferson.

HAVE SERVED BEFORE.

Four of the new men running for the Common Council have heretofore served in one or the other branches in the past. They are Messrs. Wallerstein, of Madison; Fergusson, of Lee; Dickerson, of Marshall, and Don Leavy, of Clay.

Mr. Wallterstein served eight years in the lower branch from Madison and was defeated by a narrow majority two years ago. Mr. Fergusson represented Jefferson in the present Council until he removed his residence to the western portion of the city.

Mr. Dickerson was a five time president of the Board of Aldermen, and Mr. Don Leavy served a term in the lower branch from Marshall Ward some years ago.

Colonel M. L. Spotswood, who is standing for the Council in Henry Ward, has twice been Commonwealth's attorney of the city.

Of the fifteen aspirants for the Board, ten are to be chosen. Nine of them are incumbents and the rest new men.

The following have been thrown out of the wards they now represent and are running before new constituents:

Mr. Burton, from Monroe to Henry.

Messrs. Beck and Bahen, from Jackson, to Monroe.

There are two pretty fights for the Board, one is in Lee and the other in Madison. In the former, Mr. A. W. Bennett, the well known undertaker, is competing for the honor with Mr. Phil. B. Sheild, and in the latter Messrs. W. T. Dabney and Otway S. Allen, both present members, are contesting for the only vacancy to be filled.

Below will be found a complete list of all the candidates for the Board and Council who paid up on yesterday and whose names will be on the official ballot, those indicated by a star being new men, and the incumbents being unmarked:

Tragle's Special Sale.

A TOTAL ECLIPSE.

To-morrow morning will mark the opening of an unparalelled low-price sale that will totally eclipse anything heretofore attempted, either here or elsewhere. We've opened a pretty new store at No. 21 West Broad street, and we want you to know it. We want you to know that the new store is a duplicate of the East Broad street store. That's the "why" of the sale. When we announce a special sale of drugs at our stores it means something more than a reduction in price of a few patent medicines, for every day during the past seven years we've sold our drugs in that way; therefore, our "Special Sales" may be called "Distribution Sales," for it means the distribution of all kinds of drugs, medicines and toilet articles at unheard of prices. It means the selling of the best kinds of dependable merchandise at "cut prices"; it means increased buying capacity of your purse—the balance you will learn by attending the sale. We want to emphasize that the main reason for the sale is to better acquaint the "West End" public with our new West Broad street store, which is by far the most attractive, elegantly appointed and most conveniently located in Richmond.

21 WEST BROAD SREET.

If you have not yet tasted of the delicious beverages served at our handsome new fountain, you have missed a treat. All agree that ours is THE BEST. Better have some; you'll call again.

If you cannot conveniently attend this sale, telephone your wants to store nearest to you. Delivery will be made to all parts of the city promptly and withtout extra charge.

Not more than two articles of the same kind will be sold to any one customer.

No bottle or box will be labelled in any way other than the way labelled by the manufacturer.

Our name will not be stuck on goods.

In This Short But Attractive List Buyers Will Recognize at a Glance That Money Can be Saved at Our Stores.

FOR SIX DAYS WE WILL GIVE YOU THE BENEFIT OF THESE PRICES.

FOSTER HAS THEM NOW.

Mr. W. W. Foster, the well known artist, whose studio is on North Ninth Street, has purchased all the negatives of the Elite Studio, on Broad Street, which recently suspended business.

These negatives have been carefully and systematically filed away by Mr. Foster, and he is in a position to duplicate any orders sent to him where sittings were had at the Elite. Mr. Foster thinks much of the work done by the Elite was very fine, and he will be glad to furnish duplicates at any time to those desiring them.

WONDERFUL HORSE.

Would Catch Moonshiners by the Collar and Hold Them.

(Special to The Times-Dispatch.)

GREENSBORO, N. C., April 16.—A company to handle carpets, mantels, wall paper, etc., was organized yesterday, with a capital stock of $50,000. The new firm will occupy the building now occupied by the five and ten cent store. The officers of the company are H. H. Holliday, president; A. N. Perkins, vice-president; J. N. Leak, secretary. Mr. Leak, who has been in the retail carpet business for several years, becomes manager of the new enterprise.

A very valuable horse belonging to Deputy Marshal A. C. Bryan, of Wilkes county, died Thursday. The horse had been trained by him to catch blockaders who tried to run away when wanted. The animal showed unusual intelligence, and when given the rein would always, so the story goes, help his rider catch the law-breakers.
