VIRGINIA DIVISION.

Work of Daughters of the Confederacy Here.

The Virginia Division of the U. D. C., includes ninety-nine chapters, with an enrolled membership of 4,750 Virginia women. The work accomplished by the division tells its own story throughout the State, where monuments have been erected to Confederate dead in every county, and in Richmond, where evidences of their patriotic devotion greet the eye on every side. Since its formation, Richmond Chapter, U. D. C., inspired by the example of its untiring president, Mrs. Norman V. Randolph, has been an active factor in the patriotic and memorial work accomplished in the city and State.

Wherever charity, was to be bestowed or monuments to be built, the Richmond Chapter has done its part. So has the Virginia Division. Lee Camp Auxiliary and Pickett Auxiliary are made up from members of Richmond Chapter, Daughters of the Confederacy. For many years these auxiliary bodies have been intrusted with the disbursement of camp funds expended in aiding indigent families of Confederate soldiers, in procuring necessaries for the sick and in burying the dead. From Richmond Chapter has been formed a committee which provides entertainment and amusements for the veteran Confederates at Lee Camp Home.

The Virginia Division of the United Daughters of the Confederacy has reproduced "Beauvoir," the home of Jefferson Davis, at the Jamestown Exposition. This building will be headquarters for the Daughters during the time of the exposition. Mrs. L. E. Williams, of Kentucky, who is in charge of the building, will be assisted by representatives from the different State chapters and the officers of the building committee, who will act as hostesses.

Richmond Chapter, during the reunion, extends a most cordial and heartfelt welcome to the Daughters of the Confederacy who will come to the capital of the Confederacy to witness the completion of a great work, undertaken and carried forward by them from its beginning to its ending, that will come on June 3, 1907, in the unveiling of the Jefferson Davis Monument.

R. E. Lee.

He is sleeping now the sleep of peace,
His work on earth is done.
God hath given his his release,
And he is safe for the Kingdom to
Come.

Let no man his name assail,
His deeds were hid from none.
Almighty God, may noneof us fail
To meet him in the Kingdom to
Come.

He is sleeping now the sleep of the
Just,
This can be denied by none.
We can, we will, and we must
Meet him in the Kingdom to Come.

He is sleeping now, our noble Lee,
We are following him one by one.
Thanks be to God, we know he is free,
And safe in the Kingdom to Come.

Taps have sounded, and the lights
Muffle now the drum,
Comrades, join in the farewell shout:
"Lee is safe in the Kingdom to Come!"
