Judges Announce the Prize-Winners in a Number of Departments

those who paid made no complaint. Then the cry went up that the racers were coming around the turn; there was a fierce scramble to the fence, and the Midway was silent, to shout again when a streak of color flashed by the stand across the way. There were many amusing incidents. A young woman, for instance, who had been persuaded against her will to throw rings at money, caught a silver dollar with the first throw, and when the fakir handed it to her she blushed her refusal. Not being a good sport she declined to accept, but her younger brother put up an awful squeal and he went away with the goods. At another place a barker was trying to fill a turn for candy. A colored person tossed a dime into the number seven pan, and when seven came he took his profits, refusing to play again. He knew when he had enough.

The crooks and beggars were around, the latter, of the legless kind, sitting right in the path of the crowds, and not being afraid of having big men step upon their toes. Around and about the refreshment stands spielers were calling their wares, and every class was represented, from the old negro woman to the members of the fashionable church. It was a good day for the dimes.

Throughout the day there was more congestion than usual in the exhibit buildings, which showed that the visitors had an eye to things substantial. The displays were more carefully examined than on former occasions, and naturally there came more praise. Those who go to the grounds to-day will have another chance to view the products which have made the fair a success, and as this will be the last call, it would be well to pass up the Midway and go into the places where real good attractions are free and worth while.

THOSE WHO WON PRIZES

Judging in All Departments of Live Stock and Poultry Shows Closes---Visitors Enthusiastic Over Fine Exhibits.

Judging in all departments of the live stock and poultry shows at the State Fair closed yesterday. Though the crowds were not as large as on Richmond Day, there were hundreds of visitors at all times in the various buildings, viewing the fine exhibits.

Mr. Higginbotham, of Loudoun county, showed some fine saddle horses, and Mr. Cotton, of Indiana, had a splendid herd of short horn cattle.

Messrs. Shotwell and Gifford, of Sutton, Mass., had some splendid entries of beef breed cattle, winning all prizes in the Devon class.

Probably never before has there been such a large and high-class show of fine cattle, horses, sheep and swine as is now on exhibition at the State Fair. Nothing but praise is heard on every hand, and President Stuart is enthusiastic in giving credit to the farmers and breeders, who have contributed so liberally to the success of this department of the fair.

In the poultry building there is a little side exhibit that is not strictly a chicken show, but one that interests the little folk equally as much. It is a cage of three months' old registered Scotch collie puppies from the Bright Side Collie Kennels, of Bowling Green, Va. The playful little animals are a source of constant amusement to the young visitors to the poultry house.

Announcement of prize-winners in the various departments was made yesterday as follows:

THE CALL-WATT CO. AND THEIR EXHIBITS

Oldest House on the Grounds. The Unit Road Machine.

The Call-Watt Company, of No. 13 South Fifteenth Street, the oldest farm implement house in Richmond, are extensive exhibitors of the State Fair. They occupy good space in the agricultural implement department and have it well arranged for exhibition purposes.

Their attractive show consists of a general line of farming implements, such as plows, disc cultivators, walking and riding cultivators, field rollers, disc harrows, Empire grain and fertilizer drills and fertilizer distributors and corn planters; and last, but not least, the Unit road machine, which is a wonderful and most useful road-maker, that will enable a farmer to work his own farm roads at small cost, or counties and towns to do good work where the larger machines cannot well be used. No implement on the grounds has attracted more attention than the Unit road machine. The Call-Watt Company are the agents for it in all the territory from Maryland to the Gulf, east of the Mississippi, and most of it so far as Missouri, Arkansas and Texas are concerned.

Within the past two years the Call-Watt Company have sold over 400 of them. The "Unit" was formerly manufactured only in New York, but so extensive has become the trade of the Richmond house on them, arrangements have been completed for the manufacture of the Call-Watt Company's supply in this city, and henceforth the machine will be a Richmond product. The "Unit" is extensively used on country roads and unpaved streets in cities and towns. The city of Richmond has two of them in use on its earth streets, and they give perfect satisfaction.

How the Name Comes.

The "Unit" is so called because it has but one wheel and takes but one team and one man to operate it.

It is supported mainly by the wheel, which is flanged to make it run in line of draft, its axle being secured to a section of angle iron, which serves as a continuation of the pole and resembles a plow beam.

The moldboard, six feet in length, is set at an angle of 45 degrees with the beam, and covers about four and one-half feet. A small wheel is placed behind its front end to carry that part when necessary, and behind it is the driver's platorm.

By means of the levers both ends of the moldboard are under control of the driver. It is short, and can be easily turned around in narrow roads to trim up short sections, etc. When turning, and going to and fro, the blade is carried entirely free from the ground.

The inducement to get up this machine came from seeing horses abused trying to work the expensive and extensive so-called road machines, weighing a ton or more, and carried on the edge of a scraper blade, in which condition no six horses can work them properly, their labor being wasted dragging a heavy, cumbersome machine over ground in such an unscientific manner.

The display of Empire grain and fertilizer drills and corn planters, for which the Call-Watt Company are the Richmond agents, is complete and interesting. It is in charge of Mr. S. K. Miller, of Lynchburg, who is the general agent of the Shortsville, N. Y., factory for Virginia and parts of West Virginia and North Carolina. Mr. Miller's district headquarters and warehouse are in Lynchburg.

The Famous Plows.

The old established business of the Call-Watt Company was started in this city by George Watt in the year 1840. The house has always enjoyed a large trade throughout the South, and their famous Watt plows, "Crown" and "Crescent," are known in every Southern State.

They have also had for years a good trade in their plows in India, Australia and other British possessions. In these countries the English government does everything in its power to encourage agriculture. The government agents buy plows and other farm implements and sell them to such of the farmers as are able to buy them; to others they rent them at a nominal sum, and to the very impecunious, who are able to neither buy nor rent, but who show an inclination to use them, the agents furnish the plows free.

To meet these demands the government agents have tested all the makes of plows from every part of the world, and selected for permanent use such as are best adapted to the country. The Call-Watt plows have stood the test, and thus the old established house has built up a large trade in the countries named, both with the government and with individuals and the trade. These plows have from time to time been put on exhibition and tested at agricultural fairs or assemblies instituted by the British government in its far away provinces for the encouragement of agriculture, and diplomas have been awarded the plows time and again. Some of these, which are framed and hang in the office of the Call-Watt Company, are curious-looking documents written and printed on one side in a kind of Hindoo language, with the English translation on the opposite side. These documents and the foreign trade the plows enjoy tell of their value as nothing else can.
