CUTTING AFFRAY MAY PROVE FATAL

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.]

Washington, N. C., November 24.—A very serious cutting affray took place in the barber shop of Edmond Edwards, on Main Street, about 11 o'clock last night, when Josh Mills and Ben Ormond became involved in a quarrel. Ormand had found some fault with the service he had received at the livery stable of Mills, and had expressed his dissatisfaction in very strong terms to a number of people. Mills, having heard of the remarks, went to look for Ormond and found him in the barber shop. They had some words, and a fight ensued.

Mills used his knife with fearful results to Ormond, whose face, neck, arms and body were a mass of stabs and slashes. His face was slashed in several places, two deep cuts in his throat, his arm cut through the muscle to the bone, a long deep cut across his left side to the ribs, and several stabs in the breast and back. As soon as the two men could be separated, Ormond was taken to the Washington Hospital, with blood streaming from fourteen wounds, a mass of bloody gore, and in an almost dying condition. He is expected to die.

Mills succeeded in making his escape, and has not yet been caught.

The barber shop was partially wrecked by the fighters, the front glass door smashed, and one or two of the customers injured.

COLLEGE FOR WOMEN PROBLEM UP AGAIN

Board of Visitors of University Will Take Action Next Month.

OUTCOME IS PROBLEMATICAL

Advocates and Opponents of Plan Will Be Invited to Appear.

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.]

Charlottesville, Va., November 23.—The board of visitors of the University of Virginia will meet in special session early in December to give official expression to the board's sentiment on the question of the proposed co-ordinate college for women at the university. The importance of the decision of the board of visitors on this subject can hardly be overestimated. Dean James Morris Page said recently: "If the board of visitors is opposed to a co-ordinate college for women at the university, the probability is that there will never be such a college."

To aid them in making a wise and a just decision, the members of the board will invite the leading advocates and opponents of the plan to appear before them at the December session and to present their arguments. It is understood that Mrs. Mary C. B. Munford, of Richmond, and Professor Ormond Stone, formerly at the head of the chair of astronomy in the university, will be the chief speakers on behalf of the woman's college, Henry Taylor, Jr., Murray McGuire and Eppa Hunton, Jr., all of Richmond, and other alumni probably will lead the fight against such a college.

Discussion of the plan for a co-ordinate college for women in the neighborhood of the university first attracted attention during the session of 1910-11. At that time there was also some talk of co-education, but this was soon abandoned for the less radical system, co-ordination, by which the women would have a college near enough to the university for them to profit by its library and general lectures, but have their own classes, conducted by the professors of the university, distinct from those attended by the men.

In the spring of 1911 the student body expressed its sentiment by ballot, and on the final count of a vote, which represented practically all enrolled students, there were found to be about twenty students favoring co-education, a like number favoring co-ordination, and the others opposed to any change. President Alderman favored co-ordination, and the faculty voted 36 to 5 in favor of it. When a bill was introduced into the Legislature at its last session for the establishment of the college, it was defeated in the Senate by a vote of 20 to 14.

It has been a very noticeable fact that throughout all the discussion brought up in this connection, and while the faculty, the students, and many of the alumni, both as individuals and as associations, have expressed themselves emphatically either for or against the plan, the board of visitors has remained silent and apparently neutral. Its action at the December meeting is awaited eagerly by every one interested in the university. If it ratifies the proposition, it would take hard, uphill work to defeat the bill that will be introduced in the Legislature in January. If, however, the board of visitors goes on record as being opposed to the change, it is more than likely that the plan will be abandoned altogether, no attempt being made to pass the bill through the Legislature.

VETERAN WOUNDED.

Loses One of His Legs As Result of Hunting Accident.

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.]

Harrisonburg, Va., November 23.—William C. Long, seventy-three years old, Confederate veteran and long an employe of the Houck Tannery here, lies seriously ill at the Rockingham Memorial Hospital. It has been found necessary to amputate his leg between the knee and the hip on account of a severe injury sustained on Thursday, when he was shot in the leg accidentally by Paul Koontz, sixteen-year-old son of Mail Carrier M. E. Koontz. They were returning from a hunt, when young Koontz stumbled over a wire and fell, causing the discharge of his gun, the load entering the rear of Mr. Long's leg. Physicians hurried to his assistance, but so great had been the loss of blood that an injection of a saline solution was necessary before the operation.

At the battle of Gettysburg half a century ago Mr. Long was shot in the leg, and while being carried from the field another bullet passed through his hand. He recovered from his injuries and went back to the front in several months.

Following the accident on Thursday, young Koontz lost his head, and in his fright ran several miles before he could be halted and assured that he had nothing to fear.

FEMALE ATTIRE SCARES ASQUITH

Mrs. Pankhurst, in Last Lecture in America, Defends Suffragette Militancy.

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.]

Washington, November 23.—Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst, the English militant, will appeal to the courts of New York to block Anthony Comstock from interfering with the sale of the book written by her daughter, Christabel. Mrs. Pankhurst said to-day:

"An elderly gentleman, who had constituted himself the guardian of public morals in New York, and thought it his duty to keep everything covered up, instead of bringing it out in the open where it could be dealt with, has opposed the book. A test case will be brought in the New York courts to see whether or not Mr. Comstock can prevent the sale of the book in the great city of New York, where light and still more light is needed on the vexed questions discussed in my daughter's book."

Prolonged cheers greeted Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst at her last lecture in this country here to-day. English militants were not an army of women looking under beds for burglars and mice, she declared.

"On the contrary," said Mrs. Pankhurst, "it is the Cabinet ministers and the police who are looking under beds for militants, the bugaboo of English officialdom. If Asquith sees anything in female attire he is terrified.

"Asquith, the protector of liberties in England, goes out to public meetings with a bodyguard of detectives and police. If he is invited to a dinner, he is looking about in fear, lest some militant spring up out of the soup and ask him, 'What are you going to do about votes for women?'

"President Wilson, by admitting me into this country, has accepted the fact that the militant movement in England is a revolution, and I am glad that my detention, which caused me little personal discomfort, has developed that point.

"I have been in the cradle of the American Revolution in Boston and Providence," continued Mrs. Pankhurst, "and they are quarreling still for the honor of who started the Revolution. Boston prides itself on having destroyed the cargo of tea which was private property, and Providence for having burned a ship, also private property. The grievances of the American Revolution were those that touched pockets of men.

"The militant women of England have destroyed private property, but, because of grievances far greater than anything touching their pocketbooks. If American women would dare to fight for their purses, they would be in rebellion now, because of the new income tax, which has just passed without asking them. The English militant prefers broken windows to broken lives, and if, by our militancy, we can save any lives from being broken, then give me a stone, and I will go out and break a window."

Wild applause greeted this statement, but Mrs. Pankhurst, much to the evident disappointment of many in the audience, did not make any further move to carry out this threat.

They prescribe Resinol freely, confident that its soothing, healing action is brought about by medication so bland and gentle as to be suited to the most delicate or irritated skin. "Did you read in The Times-Dispatch about that terrible accident, Mrs. Brown?"

"What was it? I'm always in ignorance of the news because hubby buys The Times-Dispatch on his way to work."

Wives who are treated this way should insist on having The Times-Dispatch home-delivered. It gives them a chance to read the news; and is better for hubby, too—he needn't take a chance on missing the newsies.
