SCHOOL BUILDING BURNS.

Lynchburg Has $8,000 Fire and Problem of Caring for Children.

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.]

Lynchburg, Va., March 13.—The Court Street School building, which housed two grammar and three primary grades and the night school, with 231 students enrolled, was destroyed by fire this morning at 3 o'clock. If the fire did not start from a cigarette or match left by a night school pupil, the origin cannot be explained. Starting on the second floor, the fire evidently burned for hours before it broke through the roof, and when the fire alarm was turned in the roof was ready to fall. The fire was confined to the upper floor and the roof was entirely consumed. The lower floor was deluged with water, including the office of Superintendent E. C. Glass. The loss is fixed at $8,000, fully insured, excepting losses to children by the burning or wetting of their books. With all the other schools crowded the school board will experience trouble in caring for the burned-out children.

This is the first fire the city has ever experienced in its public school buildings since the system was established.

Growing a Prize Acre of Corn.

Carroll County: "I have an acre of land which I am going to use to compete for the prize of $25 offered for the largest yield in this county. One-half of the land was in cowpeas, and the peas picked and the vines turned under and sown to rye. The other half was in corn and also sown to rye. I shall apply 1,000 pounds of slaked lime to the acre. Part of the land made twenty-eight bushels of corn an acre last year. Growing a Prize Acre of Corn.

Carroll County: "I have an acre of land which I am going to use to compete for the prize of $25 offered for the largest yield in this county. One-half of the land was in cowpeas, and the peas picked and the vines turned under and sown to rye. The other half was in corn and also sown to rye. I shall apply 1,000 pounds of slaked lime to the acre. Part of the land made twenty-eight bushels of corn an acre last year. Will it do to plant seed that was grown in Southampton County, which is very pretty? I propose to cover the land with manure well and disk down the rye and turn it under. What other fertilizer should I use? Plant corn grown at home. Seed from the lower Tidewater section would take a year or more to get acclimated to your mountain section. Plant in rows four feet apart and leave it eighteen inches in the row. After plowing apply 1,000 pounds broadcast of the following mixture: 1,200 pounds of acid phosphate, 100 pounds of nitrate of soda, 500 pounds of tankage and 200 pounds of muriate of potash, to make a ton.

Cultivate the corn level and shallow and never put a turning plow in the field after planting, and lay by level instead of the common practice of tearing the roots and banking soil to the rows to dry out. What it will cost to grow corn in this way is a very different thing.

The Work of Plant Foods, Etc.

"Please tell me what part is played in the production of corn by potash nitrogen and phosphorus? Will lime help land that is inclined to bake hard after a rain, and is devoid of humus? Is there anything in the form of dust that can be used to destroy the bugs on Irish potatoes? Will it do to sow crimson clover and peas together at last working, or corn? Will crimson clover sod do to plant potatoes on, and will lime help potatoes?" Nitrogen is the essential part of the living matter in the plant, the material that does all the work of building. Nitrogen in a fertilizer, then, encourages the vital energy of the plant, causing more rapid growth. But for its building work it needs material, and in the presence of a good supply of potash the plant forms starch, and this starch is transformed, some of it into woody matter, some in sugars, oils and acids. Then the phosphorus takes up the work of transporting the starch to points where needed, and storing it as starch in seeds and tubers. Hence the grain-making is the work of the potash and phosphorus, and the lint in cotton is all made from starch. Lime will tend to inoculate a clay soil, and make it more mellow, but the prevention of baking hard is best done by getting humus into the soil. You can mix one part of Paris green well into fifty parts of air-slaked lime, and dust it over the potatoes to kill the bugs. It will not do to sow crimson clover with peas at last working of the corn. It is too early to sow the clover, and it would be smothered by the peas anyway. Cut and shock the corn and disk down the peas, and sow the clover then in September or late August. There is nothing better than a clover sod for Irish potatoes, but use no lime, as the sweetening of the oil will encourage the growth of the scab fungus.

Buckingham County: A correspondent writes a long letter asking many questions about flue-curing and the growing of bright tobacco and fertilizer for the same. I have several times given here the best formula I know of for tobacco, and you can refer back to previous numbers if you keep them. Then only trial will prove whether your soil will grow tobacco that will cure yellow or not. As to the curing, I have heretofore said that I am not an expert flue-curer. I have grown bright tobacco and have had it cured, but I did not do the curing, and I do not believe that any one can learn flue-curing from printed directions. The only way I know to learn the art is to employ an expert curer and then stay by him and learn how he does it and why he makes differences in the heat at times according to the condition of the tobacco. Then most bright tobacco in cot cut by primed and the leaves cured, while the stalks are left in the field. You ask if I can see any reason why you should not grow bright tobacco. In fact, I cannot tell, nor can any one tell if a piece of land he has never seen, and on which bright tobacco has not been grown, will make it or not. As I have said, only actual trial can determine what sort of tobacco will be produced on a soil that has not been tested. And worked-in sheet iron will make flues for you, especially in the towns of the bright tobacco section. I know no reason why good gray soil in Buckingham should not make bright tobacco. Your barn must have a brick furnace, and you can run flues both ways around the house to a chimney.

Topdressing Grass.

Mecklenburg County: "I wish to topdress some grass lots with acid phosphate or Thomas phosphate, and do not know which will be best. Will be glad to have your advice. Please also state whether ashes from soft coal have any value as a fertilizer. I have some to move, and if they will do no harm I propose to spread them on grass." As a topdressing for grass I would use 200 pounds of Thomas phosphate and fifty pounds of nitrate of soda an acre. The soft coal ashes are of little value as a fertilizer. They do have a slightly more amount of potash in them than hard coal ashes, but the percentage is so small that it is usual to say that they have no value. And yet I did once use the ashes on grass, and whether due to the ashes or not, I have a remarkable growth of white clover on the part of the pasture where they were used. I have found, too, that the ashes are very fine as a mulch for some things, to retain the moisture in dry weather.

In my garden tomato plants mulched with coal ashes kept green and more healthy than those where no mulch was used, and never stopped bearing till frost. This was due, I think, to the moisture-retaining character of the ashes. I once had a pile of hard coal ashes in an out-of-the-way place where it had been
