Ardmore, Monday, August 2, 1915.

CITY OF MEXICO.

There is no recognized military authority in Mexico and the capital city of the republic is made headquarters for first one faction and then another. The city is pillaged and robbed by first one band and then another. Undisciplined troops made responsible to no power are no more nor less than bands of outlaws taking what they see that they want and destroying that which they cannot use. The country as a whole has been willing for the president to pursue the course he thought best, but it does seem that the principle of humanity alone would suggest that the Mexican problem be settled by this country. The southern republic has been bleeding for four years and there is no peace in sight. There does not seem to have risen on the horizon one single unselfish patriot who is willing to restore to the people their rights and leave them to govern themselves. The opinion prevails that leaders are nothing more than plunderers. That republic will have no peace until a military genius who is also a patriot quells the disturbance and establishes a form of government that will restore agrarian rights and invite commercial progress. It has been said that every emergency produces the genius to control it but if Mexico has a Washington he has not yet made himself known.

We know from contact with our own undisciplined troops, what Mexico is suffering. The men of our own army, where there is a military head, and where every man is responsible for his acts, do many things that outrage common justice. The half civilized soldier, with no military authority, and maddened by four years of fruitless struggle, becomes a hard-ened criminal fit for any crime.

O

HENRY W. GRADY

(William H. Ridgway in August Ladies' Home Journal)

A man famous the country over walked into his office one day and said to his associates:

"I am going away for a week or so and I do not want you or any one else to know where I am. Don't worry about me. I shall be here when I get back." And he disappeared.

The man took the train for the town where his mother lived in the old home.

"Mother," said he as he took her in his great strong arms, and kissed her, "I have come home to spend a week all alone with you. This time I have not come merely to kiss you how do do and good by and go again, but to stay with you a bit. I want to go back to the old days and be just your boy again, and have you treat me as if I were a little fellow once more."

The wise little mother asked no question of the big son upon whom his country had lavished success and fame but merely said to him: "All right, dear."

"And I mean just what I say, mother," persisted the son. "I want you to be my 'mother, dear,' just like you used to be in the old days. I want you to make me the little pie-dough critter on the back of the stove just as you used to do, and the turnover in the oven. I want the dear old disapproved homes with the raisin eyes. Cook me the eggs in the saucer. Cut me the slice white bread with the brown crust and the molasses a-oozin' away down into it. Will you, mother?"

"I certainly will my son," gladly replied the mother, wondering much but asking nothing.

The next day the mother was surprised to see her famous son go down to the swimming hole and roll in the mud puddle on the clayey bank and splash around with the pickaninnies. Earlier he was in the woods, where once again he crawled all over the old gin and tried to "skin the cat" on the pole. He would climb up to the machine and let the negro boys drive him around as he used to drive old Pete the mule. He loafed around the cabins and started his old mammy or some Uncle Remus to telling again the stories of Brer Rabbit and Brer Fox, which Joel Chandler Harris has made immortal.

In the lazy afternoons, after a nap, he would throw himself down on the porch floor at his mother's feet, and, putting his head up in her lap, where she could play with his hair and smooth his cheek, he would say: "Mother, tell me the old stories you used to tell me about Joseph and his coat, David and his sling, Daniel and the lions, Elijah and the chariot, Elisha and the bears, and all those." And the mother did.

At other times he would go to the mantel and bring the "Bible book," and say: "Here, mother, read me again the sweet old story that you used to read about the little baby that was born in a stable, the angels that sang and the wise men who brought gifts and who followed a star, and how He grew to be a man and went about doing good and making the world better, and how men killed Him; and how He is now up in heaven yonder and wants your son to be a good boy."

And the mother would.

When night would come and he had gone up to bed he would call to her: "Come, mother, and tuck me in and hear me say my prayers." And, like unto the days that had gone, he repeated:

"Now I lay me down to sleep,
I pray the Lord my soul to keep;
If I should die before I wake,
I pray the Lord my soul to take.
God bless mamma and make me a good little boy. Amen."

Then he would say: "Now, mother, will you put the candle out in the hall, and hold by hand and sing me the song you used to sing?" And many a man knows what the mother sang:

"I think when I read that sweet story of old,
When Jesus was here among men,
How He called little children, as lambs to His fold—
I should like to have been with them then."

Thus for nearly two weeks the famous son lived his boyhood days over again in the old home with his mother. And then he went back to his work.

When he arrived at his office he found waiting for him an invitation from the New England Society of New York to be the principal speaker at the society's next dinner. He accepted the invitation and went to New York and spoke.

His speech was called: "The Old South and the New." It thrilled the country from ocean to ocean. It was the first time the new south had had a chance to speak since the great conflict. And the words of the new south were words of love and perpetual peace. In his oration is that magnificent tribute to America's great president, Abraham Lincoln, which has passed every southern mouth forever. It was this outpouring of love of the southland that washed for all time the "bloody shirt."

Where did that inspired message come from? Said the orator afterward: "When I found myself upon my feet every nerve was strung as tight as a fiddle string, and all a-tingling. I knew then that God had given me a message for that assemblage. As soon as I opened my mouth it came rushing forth."

In the history of our country there have been three great orations, and they will be found side by side in every collection of masterpieces of eloquence. The first was by Patrick Henry, at Williamstown, the second by Abraham Lincoln, at Gettysburg, and the third by Henry W. Grady, at New York—the last by the man who went to his mother.

What induced Henry W. Grady to go back to his mother in her old home?

The reason is best told in another story:

One evening, after a meeting in Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, where I had told the above story, Mr. Harry McCormick came to me and said:

"I was much interested in that story of yours about Mr. Grady. I think I am able to add the preface to it.

"I was in Atlanta attending the international convention of the Young Men's Christian association, at the close of our conventions it is the custom for the men to take hold of hands, form a chain around the room, and sing 'Blest Be the Tie That Binds.' Mr. Grady was there, and we asked him to join in with us. He refused, saying: 'No, fellows, I can't do it. I am sorry, but I can't do it.'

"The next day word came to our hotel that if it was not too much trouble Mr. Grady would like to see Mr. Morse and some more of us at his office. When we got there Mr. Grady met us with all the fine courtesy of the southern gentleman, saying: 'I know you will pardon me for taking your valued time on the eve of your departure, but you notice last night that I could not join hands with you and sing "Blest be the tie that binds our hearts in Christian love." You fellows have something I do not have. I used to have it years ago, back home with my mother at Athens. But in the cruel war and the hurly-burly of public life I fear it has got away from me. I want it back. I have asked you fellows to come here and tell me how I can get it back.'

"We told him the old story. It was all we had to tell him."

That day Henry W. Grady went back to his mother and to his God.

There have been a large number of homes built in Ardmore during the current year, but the demand has not been met. Others should be built. There are no modern homes without occupants and newcomers state that rents are higher than in other cities. Ardmore should keep building, that the city may keep up its present progress in attracting people from other cities.

Loan Association's Growth.

The Peoples Building and Loan Association of Ardmore has made marked progress during the month of July. The secretary's report for the month will show that the association has more than doubled in membership, cash receipts and amount of stock in force, during the month. June closed with 28 members, July with 57. Cash receipts for June amounted to $260.69; for July $585.79. The amount of stock in force at close of business June 30, was $17,300; at close of business July 31 was $55,375. A strenuous effort will be made to again double in August. Other associations in cities no larger than Ardmore, have a half million dollars of stock in force with five hundred members, and a monthly income of from $5,000 to $10,000. Of course, it takes time for associations to grow into those proportions, but The Peoples Building and Loan Association of Ardmore is headed in that direction and it is only a matter of time until it takes its place among the foremost associations of the southwest. The directors are conservative, but progressive and enthusiastic; the members are all boosters, the secretary is capable, judging from the above results. The association is bound to grow. The following is a list of the new members for July: Frank R. Lipscomb of Marietta, J. C. Echols, Rebekah Selvidge, P. C. Miller, Jno. S. Owens, S. W. Tyer, D. Lacy, Geo. R. Norris, P. E. Rust, W. G. Doak, J. S. Mullen, J. W. Harreld, J. B. Spragins, Chas. von Weise, C. F. Adams, A. C. Strachley, Frank S. Gates, F. C. Dings, E. E. Chivers, J. E. Ring, Mrs. Dessa M. Ring, J. M. Hoard, H. T. Hunt, T. G. Gibson, J. M. Lanford, H. A. Kimbel, G. M. Henley, J. B. Brady, Mrs. G. P. Selvidge.

ERICK BOARD OF TRADE PLANS FOR CROP EXHIBIT

Erick, Okla., Aug. 1. During the past week a committee selected by the Erick board of trade has been busy perfecting plans for one of the biggest and most important enterprises ever undertaken in western Oklahoma. Having a bumper crop of everything raised on a western Oklahoma farm, and that means diversity in its truest sense, business men have decided that the Erick country should be represented by a creditable exhibit at the state fair this fall. Following up the decision by action, the Erick Fair, Stock and Agricultural exposition has sprung into existence with E. M. Green president, and C. C. Cabiness, secretary. W. H. Heske, John W. Heflin, W. T. Bingham, and the officers as the executive committee. Already this county has been flooded with advertising matter relative to the event. A splendid premium list is now on the press, and many high-class attractions are being booked, and the visitor to Erick September 1, 2, and 3, will not only have the most enjoyable time of the life, but see a display of farm products, stock and poultry that will outclass anything in the state.

Appreciating the honor such an incident would confer, the committee has forwarded to Hon. J. W. C. Beckham, ex-governor, and now United States senator from Kentucky, a cordial invitation to be present and make an address. This county is fortunate enough to have been named for the senator, and there are 200,000 citizens here who would be delighted to see and hear its illustrious namesake.

Col. Sidney Suggs, ex-state highway commissioner, has been invited by the officials of the fair association to address them on the subject of roads and road building and has accepted. Col. Suggs while commissioner, made many warm friends in Beckham county, who are believers in his theories of road construction, and while he is not now a state official, he is in demand all over the state to address just such affairs as this on his pet subject. Beckham county is a unit for good roads and realizes that the advice given by the ex-commissioner will be of value to them.

His Wanderings Ended.

In a recent long-drawn trial in New York the defense introduced a miner as a witness and went into a detailed inquiry as to his exact whereabouts for the past ten years. It was most wearisome. For a day and a half the lawyer asked this man to tell his wanderings year by year. Finally they got down to 1911, and asked him: "What did you do on May 16, 1911?" "I went to Cobalt." "How long did you remain there?" "I have been there ever since." Juror Number Nine rose in his place and said fervently: "Thank God!"
