TULSA DAILY WORLD

Mrs. Tipton had was surprised at a kitchen shower early this morning. A feller with long whiskers all a baby are soon parted.

THE DAMAGE SUIT LAWYER

[illegible] the damage suit lawyer, [illegible] expensive argument and permitted testimony calculated to induce the husband to bring suit for alienation of affection and a home is broken up. And so it goes all down the line. Nobody is safe. The high and the low, the rich and the poor, the great and mean, none are safe from the greed and the superior of the damage suit lawyer. He feeds on filth. He glories in perjury. He revels in corruption.

BLOWING UP A BALLOON

[illegible] Attorney General West is running the race for discussion. The Attorney General's opponents in the Democratic party, with the exception of the members of the [illegible] committee which investigated him and Representative Cleary, Tulsa recently, have been rather disposed to regard the doughty little [illegible] as being more windmills and the weapons of Sancho than Napoleon ever thought in all his career. This was due to the desire to avoid party scandal, to ameliorate intervening warfare as much as possible and keep the machine from showing its weak spots. But West would not have it that way. In the meantime, the unjustified assertions of his conceit, he mistakenly mistook the silence of the boys and ascribed it to fear rather than to an effort to maintain party solidarity. So he started the few guns and the few bombs and proceeded to fling the thirteen bibs the concentrated carcasses of such noble old machine wheel horses as Judge Williams, Judge Robertson, Judge Bryan and "Bob" Dunlap. If you were to listen to West's speeches you would think that he is the only state official who ought not to be in the penitentiary instead of the State House.

Naturally the old boys who have been fighting the battles of the grand old party of crooks and corruption in this state resented the mild impeachment, and proceeded to pull a few feathers out of General West's crest. And the things they have said about him and the things they are printing about him are worth reading. If the World, which has accumulated two libel suits from the attorney general, would print half of what the leaders of his own party and the newspapers of his own party are saying, writing

FATAL GIFT OF HUMOR

[illegible]

YOU MUST PAY FOR IT

[illegible]

Too Late.

"Now, Thomas," said the teacher, severely, "how many times must I tell you not to snap your fingers? Put your hands down and presently I'll hear from you."

Five minutes later she said:

"Now, then, Thomas, what was it you wanted to say?"

"There was a man in the entry a while ago," said Thomas, severely. "And he went out with your new silk umbrella."

There Are Others.

It is said that the tango dance sets Indians crazy. That's nothing, observes the Dixon Enterprise. We know some "star" Christians and "leading" church members who are as harmless as doves in the meeting house and as wild as a broncho at the close-arm dance. And they are Americans.

An Alternative.

Mater—Well, Effie, what are you going to be when you are grown up?

Effie—If I was a boy I'd be president, but seeing I'm a girl I guess being a rich widow is as good as anything.

THEN——AND——NOW

Sixty-six years ago today the world's first woman's rights convention was held. The scene was the Methodist church at Seneca Falls, N. Y., and the prime movers were Elizabeth Cady Stanton and Lucretia Mott. The little country church was crowded to the doors during the two days of the convention. Some of the country's most notable men were present and cheered when the "Declaration of Woman's Rights", drawn up along the lines of the Declaration of Independence of the American colonies, was promulgated. The document set forth the condition of women at that time. The feminine speakers pointed out that "colleges and high schools are closed to women; men monopolize the remunerative employments; women are not permitted to speak in public; married women cannot hold property, are not entitled to their own earnings, cannot conduct a business in their names, cannot make a contract or will, or bring suits in court; nor are they considered as competent guardians of their own children, and nowhere in the civilized world is woman permitted to have her say in government." The revolt amazed the world and brought ridicule and sarcasm down upon the pioneers.

Today American women theoretically have sufficient votes to decide who shall be the president of the United States. Ten states have granted full suffrage to their 3,500,000 or more women and are now debating whether to extend full suffrage. This question will be decided before the next presidential election is held. In several of the states women today are filling important civic and state political offices, and are candidates for others. Woman suffrage has become a world-wide movement. The subject of women suffrage has been presented before every national legislative body in the world, with the single exception of Turkey, during the past two years. The women of 26 nations are banded together in an alliance and are struggling for political recognition in their respective countries. In the field of "remunerative employment" today in the United States there is one woman to every four men engaged in gainful occupations. Five per cent of these women are married, and their vocations range from blacksmiths and roof-shinglers to bank presidents, architects and lawyers.
