HIGH FOOD PRICES BOOST THEIR TRADE

Burglars Take Advantage of Market and Enter Owasso Store.

HIDE NEAR THIS CITY

Heavy Rains Make it Possible to Trace Thieves Long Distance.

Soaring prices of food and clothing are supposed to have tempted burglars to break into the [illegible] general store at Owasso 12 miles north of Tulsa, early Saturday morning. The thieves forced a window in the front door of the store and helped away about $[illegible] worth of commodities.

An entrance was effected by breaking a front window through which one of the burglars climbed to unlock the door. The amount of loot and the short time in which it was taken leads officers to believe that several men participated in the robbery.

Picked Their Wares.

Great sacks, [illegible] canned goods, dry goods and other articles of clothing were stolen. If the thieves looked for money they were disappointed in Mr. [illegible] safe. [illegible] all of the cash which should be there should be [illegible].

The robbery was not discovered until a week's mail was delivered Monday morning. Residents who passed by the store at daybreak Sunday morning noticed a light burning in the store and have a vague impression that they saw an automobile standing near the store. [illegible] Tulsa officers are working on the case.

Looking to Russia.

There is nothing evident here that would support at this moment the claim that Russia would be the first to make peace. Nevertheless that country is thought of in this manner. Peace rumors always have flourished and possibly due to the belief that Russia is the most vulnerable of the entente powers. In military circles a further occupation of Russian territory by means of another German offensive is accepted as highly feasible. Hindenburg's elevation to chief of the general staff of the German army has convinced many persons that during the winter, when the roads are frozen, there will be no more Russian campaigns. Such are the sound conclusions for the general impression that peace will come this year.

It is conceivable a peace that will not be made at the end of the central powers feel that their armies must remain in Russian occupied territory, that their strength and efficiency that their [illegible] not be greater in proportion than those of the entente forces. Before the British nations had arrived on the scene there was always the vague fear that things might go wrong on other fronts and Russia might be knocked out. The British operations have shown that with the British nations have been as much help to the French than coming has not been decisive.

It is apparent now that with the large
