Marriage Announcement.

Wedding cards have been received in Tulsa bearing announcement of the marriage of Miss Ada Way Rogers and Mr. Walker Ellis, the latter of Oklahoma City, in San Antonio, Texas, July 16. Mr. and Mrs. Ellis will be at home to their friends at 1418 East Main street.

Miss Goldie Conway, who has been visiting Miss Mary Cannon, has returned to her home in Enid, Oklahoma.

Will Direct Choir.

Mrs. Henry J. Maggie, who is now associated with the choir of the Boston avenue Methodist church, will, after September, be choir director of the First Presbyterian church.

Within the confines of home, there occurred a beautiful wedding yesterday morning at 10:30 o'clock which united Miss Hilda Jones and Mr. Custard J. Harry in marriage. The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Denny Jones of 412 South Elwood avenue. The Rev. G. A. Chatfield of Stamford, Texas, a friend of the family, journeyed to Tulsa to officiate at the wedding and the ceremony was simple and beautiful. The bride was attended by her sister, Jane Venessa Jones, and the best man was Mr. J. C. Chatfield. A very attractive feature was associated with the nuptial music, the song, with its words and music having been composed by the younger sisters of the bride, Misses Venessa and Mildred Jones, and dedicated to their sister, the simple word, "To H," portraying their love and affection. Miss Louise Wood sang, the accompaniment being played by Miss Mildred Jones, who also rendered the wedding march. The bride presented a lovely picture in a silken frock of French organdie, against whose snowy whiteness was held her bridal bouquet of bride's roses and valley lilies. Her maid was in pink organdie and wore a corsage bouquet of pink bluswell roses showered with the dainty white blossom of the Eyepophilia. After the ceremony, which was witnessed by relatives and quite an assemblage of friends, an ice course was served, portraying pink and white tones, the entire wedding suite being floral, adorned with ferns and pink and white gladioli and roses in the same delicate shades. The improvised altar was fashioned of potted plants and in among the green setting stood vases of flowers in the chosen tones. At 12:30 the bride and groom left for a northern trip, their destination being resorts about the Great Lakes, enroute they will spend a few days in Harold Bell Wright's cabin in the Ozarks. The bride wore away a fall suit of dark blue tricotine with small hat to match. As Miss Jones she has been assistant county superintendent of schools. The groom is court reporter in the district court. It was amid these surroundings that their courtship began. On their return on September 15 Mr. and Mrs. Harry will be at home to their friends at 326 South Victor, where the groom has purchased an attractive home.

Clare, the little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. V. L. Crawford, entertained a party of friends on Tuesday afternoon in her home, commemorating her sixth natal day. Pink and white tones prevailed. Games were enjoyed, one being the hiding of small pink hearts, a pretty book being offered as a trophy for the one who found the largest amount of these love tokens. The birthday table radiated loveliness with its cake all aglow with lighted tapers held in rose cups and single candlesticks of silver and crystal holding taper tapers in the colors. Ice cream and cake proved the ideal refreshment for this merry group and with this were served heart shaped mints. Little Miss Clare was remembered with many gifts which will serve to remind her of this day of days.

Mr. and Mrs. F. L. Steenrod expect to leave in a few days for a motor trip to Wichita, Kan., where they will visit relatives and join their little daughter, Fern, who has been spending vacation days there. A Chance to Live

Annie was shocked but not unduly apprehensive. She had high confidence in her young husband. What hurt most was the ignominy of discharge!

Just how did it happen, Aunt Mog? she asked at last. "Did Bern go into another of those pool things?" She thought with a pang of how she had been diverted from getting his promise not to.

"He tried to, dear. Wind of it got to old Mr. Simms and he was very angry. Gambling, as he calls it, happens to be one of the things he is probably opposed to. If it had been anything else, I think he would have given Bernard another chance. As it was, Simms told me the only way to cure a boy of the habit is to frighten him thoroughly. I wish, dear," Aunt Mogie added, "you'd talk to Bernard seriously about this."

"Oh, indeed I will, darling!" They had reached the car line. Annie put her aunt aboard with an affectionate hoose, smiling and waving goodnight, as the car moved off.

Was her aunt's face paler and thinner than usual, or did she just imagine it? Annie asked herself. A flash of memory brought back that day when Aunt Margaret had been replaced at her publishing house by a younger woman, and Annie had first noticed, with a shock and a sense of uncanniness the streaks of silver in the hair, the lines in the loved face that time had traced. She went home feeling subdued and vaguely fearful.

Annie and Bernard talked till late that night. Annie pleaded well and wisely, stopping just short of the "I told you so" rebuke, knowing to effectively how it goads a man to fury. She wanted to encourage Bernie, not nag him. Besides, he was so sick of getting that other job "tomorrow."

"A fellow I know spoke for me," said Bernie, "and I'm sure to land the job. He says they'll pay from $25 to $30. I tell you it's a bad idea to stay too long in one place. You get in a rut. Now, if I get this job tomorrow——" He talked on, inspiring Annie with his own confidence, and they finally fell asleep with unoppressed minds.

The next morning Bernard started off sprightly to keep his appointment where "the fellow had spoken for him." When he reached there he found the manager was out. He waited a long time, other young men kept coming in and taking seats, also evidently waiting for the manager. Gradually Bernard's enthusiasm waned, there being nothing more calculated to destroy elation than the postponement of its fruition. The impressive little talk he had rehearsed in his mind dwindled in reality, and by the time he was summoned he had to force into his bearing a show of personality and capacity for the job.

Somehow he had not calculated on the man asking him minute particulars as to how he left his last position. The friend who had "spoken for him" gave Bernie the impression that he could "walk right into this job" and that it exactly "fitted him."

He stumbled around the answers regarding his departure from Simms & Orcutt. The manager looked at him depressingly, which did not add to the boy's ability to pick up confidence and make a good showing.

"We'd have to have the best of reference," he said. "It's a responsible job. With prospects. If we put it over we must have the right young man to start with."

"I—I thought the salary was $25 to begin." Bernie's surprise made him utter the remark without thinking. "I understand——"

"Well, well, you understand wrong," cut in the manager, whose finger was already touching the electric call-button on his desk. "Leave your name and address with the boy outside. We'll let you know."

GALVESTON, Aug. 5.—Abolition of the office of county treasurer was recommended this afternoon by the county judges and commissioners convention in session here after the morning session had been given over to road matters, which included the endorsement of a mileage surtax placed on trucks by the 36th legislature and the recommendation that the state operate stone quarries as a remedy for the high price of rock. It was also recommended the county commissioners while on duty overseeing road maintenance be allowed $2 a day for automobile upkeep. San Antonio was chosen as the next meeting place.

The Children's Supper Hour.

Millions of our home managers who do their own work and are mothers find it almost impossible while the children are young, to have any uninterrupted conversation with their husbands.

It is during these years, so full of demands and new problems, that the home-maker must find ways to keep abreast of the times, else the tragedy of those few wonderful years is that the husband, who is inspired by family demands to do big things, develops mentally as never before. The homemaker is also making strides, but along a highly specialized line that shows wonderful results in later years but often leaves the mother quite one-sided and uninterested in anything but her children, and so uninteresting to others.

This can be avoided by looking the situation square in the face and making the necessary plans to overcome it.

First, one must find ways to eliminate all unnecessary household operations. Proper equipment and a more or less organized system of housekeeping will do much to help. A pantry kept well stocked with the requirements for every meal will also relieve the tension. One wise woman, who got through these splendid years of young motherhood with the cultural lines she was interested in but little rusted, says she gives credit for the time she managed to find for her music and reading to the men who have perfected the canning business.

When it came to the "cross roads" with her, she balanced her vision of a worn-out middle age, with its foregoing years of drudgery over a hot stove against a forceful, capable middle age with foregoing years of happy hours with modern equipment and standardized foods.

Her decision, of course, was in favor of the foods.

The next step after installing all the labor-saving devices that came within her budget allowance, this very wise little lady set about finding a way to keep in touch with her husband's interests, she wanted to go lots further than this and to bring to him the little glimpses of cultural things that his busy days allowed no time for.

At first she contented herself with just an opportunity for conversation on the topics of the day. This she managed by clever manipulation of the children's supper time.

Let us whisper a secret—this mother is now a prominently known writer. Her children are remarkably bright, healthy, capable and self-reliant. Each one is training for a profession, and one has about attained her goal. Many years ago she wrote:

The Children's Supper.

"I knew I was a devoted mother, but when my three children reached the ages of three, six and eight it seemed to me that I must find a way to adjust the evening meal so that the children would be properly fed, that their father would have an opportunity to really enjoy them a bit and that I could have a minute's uninterrupted conversation with my husband. As I had no help it took considerable studying to find a workable plan.

"I think the hardest part was that I never seemed to have a moment's uninterrupted conversation with my husband. We were living in a suburb of a manufacturing town where my husband worked, and he was never home and ready for our night meal before half past six or seven. By that time the children were apt to be tired and naughty, to keep them in order at the table, the necessary correcting of their manners and speech took all of my energy and, by minute supper was over I had to get them ready for bed. By the time the dishes were done my husband had read his evening paper, and he, too, was tired and disinclined for conversation.

A Happy Thought.

"I also realized that the children were eating improper food. My husband needed a hot meal, with meat and hearty vegetables, and I generally had a pie for dessert. I had become very serious in reading and studying all I could find out about diet for growing children, and I had learned that I was giving the children the wrong things to eat. But how to make the change

"I made up my mind that I would give the children their supper at half past five, that I would have my supper alone with my husband without any interruption if to do so I had to put the children early to bed and pin them between the sheets. My neighbors said it couldn't be done, but it was done and the children, if anything, are happier over the new arrangements than we grown-ups are. I must admit that the readjustment period was not without difficulties, but this is the situation I have won:

"What my husband sees of the children now he enjoys, and he does see something of his wife. Some people think the getting of two suppers must be a terrible piece of work. In fact, it is less work than the old arrangement."
