Sunday Labor Day Sermon

A large audience was in the Rialto last night to hear the sermon preached by Dr. Hey W. Crook of the Methodist church, entitled "Labor Sunday Morning." The subject was "Labor."

Come, let us reason together about and examine the labor question.

Let us go back to the dark ages. In those days the world was divided into two classes, the aristocrats and the serfs. At that time the serf was a slave, not quite so well fed as the horse, not quite so well housed as the pig, not quite so well clothed as the sheep, not quite so well protected as the dog, not quite so well cared for as the ass. At that time the serf was a beast of burden, a machine, a tool, a thing, a chattel, a nonentity, a cipher, a zero, a nothing, a cipher, a zero, a nothing, a cipher, a zero, a nothing
