TULSA WOMEN DISAGREE OVER PICTURE PLAY

Some Say Griffith's Much Talked-of Picture Should Not Be Shown; Others Enthusiastic.

"Broken Blossoms" has created a sensation in Tulsa—not a question about that.

In the homes, at the men's clubs and at the women's clubs, in the cafes, hotel parlors and in the offices and offices D. W. Griffith's new picture is being discussed as much as an approaching presidential election.

Some severely criticize the picture, some mildly defend it. Some are malignant over it, others enthusiastic.

Women appear to be more divided in their opinions than men. When the Rialto management gave the special showing to a number of leading club women and literary and art gentlemen a night or two before the picture began its engagement everyone went away singing its praises. They thought it the most wonderful thing they had ever seen.

Since the picture began its week a few other women have entered from the theater breaching out anathemas against Griffith and declaring "Broken Blossoms" should not be permitted to be shown at all.

They were real mad—why? Because the picture doesn't end happily them. The lovers do not fall into each other's arms at the close and the hero is not of the personality they prefer for movie heroes.

That is Griffith's way. He does things different from everybody else. That's what has placed him on a pinnable above all other directors. Whether directing a world-startled Nation "Broken Blossoms" is a drama that is different.

There are a lot of literary highbrows that don't admire Dickens because he used and abused the slums of London and painted life as he found it.

That's what Griffith did in "Broken Blossoms." He picked up a story written in Chinatown in London, and, using it over Dickens, induced real actors—and produced it. It was from designed by popular people and he gave the world the best piece of art work made. The acting of the Chinese Barrett and the young girl, that the screen flashed for a week ahead of the date when it was produced.

Yet among all "Broken Blossoms" critics and admirers, all are in agreement that it is a wonderful work and worth the price of admission.
