WOMAN'S WORLD AND WORK . . .

LILIAN CRAWFORD PERKINS

To My Mother.

When anything is lifted on me high,
And runs bumbleing on my mouth,
And every breath of life I draw
Was sweet as spicebreath from the south,

If ever children grieving came,
Sweet transient joys to smother,
My "Balm of Gilead" came to me
In thy sweet kisses, mother.

The circling arms were ever found
And faithful was thy love
As steadfast stars in upper skies
Through silent spaces move.
And though I must home love had
In father, sister, brother,
No earthly bond was half so sweet
As that of thee, my mother!

Pray God, our life-lines none will sever
While
Wheeling The years that bring Or grief or joy, of blossoms or sorrow
Love winds and winged shines
Dark the shadows of the grave will expand in the ancient Pharaoh's we thought to thought
Wing on
Just Gone and I thy mother!

—Hallie Marshall McAfee.
