CARRANZA RENOUNCES FURTHER AMBITIONS

Mexican President Says He Will Not Be Candidate For Re-Election.

ANNOUNCEMENTS EXPECTED

Potential Candidates Will Probably Get Their Hats in the Ring Soon.

MEXICO CITY, Nov. 2.—Discussing the forthcoming elections on Saturday with Mexico City newspapermen in Queretaro, President Carranza of Mexico, declared there was no reason to anticipate any other than peaceful voting throughout the republic and expressed the belief that candidates for the presidency should begin announcing themselves and shaping their campaigns.

President Carranza reiterated emphatically that he would not be a third term candidate asserting that he preferred to turn the office over to a man elected by popular vote, and to retire to private life.

The chief executive said that he deemed the bill recently introduced in the senate granting amnesty to all former enemies of the government who are now supporting it in good faith, to be unwise at the present time. He thought, however, that such leniency might be extended after the elections.

In this connection President Carranza explained that at the present time persons who wish to return to the republic have no difficulty in doing so if they can show a proper attitude. The president was optimistic with [illegible] asserting he believed the national treasury would be in excellent shape at election time, as it has shown continued improvement in the past.

President Carranza's declaration with respect to the election is expected to cause several potential candidates to announce themselves at an early date. They have withheld formal announcement of their candidacy as a result of the president's request several months ago that such announcements be not made until nearer the election date.

SAYS WILSON RENDS ITALIAN RELATIONS

Policy on Fiume and Adriatic Questions Displeases Editor of Tempo.

ROME, Saturday, Nov. 1.—All the Rome newspapers reproduced today the interview given The Associated Press by Baron Romano Avezzena, the new ambassador to the United States, just prior to his departure from this city. Commenting on the interview, in which the ambassador expressed the hope that the questions of Fiume, and the eastern frontier of Italy would soon be settled according to national aspirations, and declared his policy will be to promote an intimate knowledge of each other by the two people, the Tempo today says:

"Baron Romano rightly emphasized the moral, political and cultural reasons, which, despite the sadness of this hour, cause the American and Italian peoples to appreciate each other. The ambassador's statement is perfectly in keeping with the gravity of the present moment. His words mean plainly that the Adriatic problems cannot be solved without regard for the rights and sentiments of Italy."

The Tempo declares President Wilson's attitude is endangering Italo-American relations, which should not be jeopardized, but points out that his occupation of the presidency is only for a definite term which will expire in due course.

BARCELONA EMPLOYERS THREATENING LOCKOUT

BARCELONA, Nov. 2.—The city government of Barcelona was in conference for several hours today with leading citizens of the city, to devise means for preventing the lockout by the employers set for tomorrow in Barcelona. All conferees promised to hel pthe government to seek to prevent violence and to work for the re-establishment of normal social conditions.

The citizens who formed themselves into a force of special police received orders to be ready for duty should the occasion require.

Four of the nine important newspapers in Barcelona have stopped publication because of the impending lockout.

Yes Indeed! I'll Say It Pays to Advertise

ST. PAUL, Minn., Nov. 2.—If you are doubtful whether it pays to advertise, read this.

A local newspaper printed a cut of a device to administer corporal punishment, which was put on the market in the east. It was called a spanking machine. A brief story listed its specifications and its possibilities.

A short time after the paper was put on the streets, a message was received here from a Minneapolis woman asking for the address of the company marketing the machines.

"I must have one of those spankers right away," she said.

Teacher: "Robert, how is it you haven't learned your lesson? It couldn't have been so hard to learn."

Bobby: "No, please, teacher; it wasn't because it was so hard to learn, but because it was so easy to forget."

His Name Was "Tooker" and In a Short Romance He Lived Up to It

Mrs. Merk Loos Tooker

The pretty romance of Merk Loos Tooker, well known socially in New York and Philadelphia, and Miss Greta E. Hoagland of Chicago, shows that the bridegroom is true to his name. When Tooker agreed to the request that he meet his cousin's best friend and aid her in getting off to Europe, his only intention, he says, was to fulfill his mission. Twenty-four hours later, however, the friend became Mrs. Tooker.

Woman Politician Turns West Side Saloon Into a Pink Tea

NEW YORK, Nov. 2.—"Sisters, we invited you to be with us today to get you into the habit of coming here to talk politics, and now that you have found the way, we hope you will come often and help us in this campaign."

The speaker paused a moment as she reached into a pretty samovar that graced the mahogany counter and drew forth a chocolate-coated bonbon to act as a chaser for the slice of cocoanut cake that had just disappeared.

Smiles and nods of approval rippled through the audience of 50 or so aproned women who sat in front of the flag-draped stand, themselves quietly munching cake and sipping tea from dainty, flowered cups.

"At last the women have their chance, and we must show the men that we are more capable than they believed." With these words Miss Hertha Rembaugh, candidate for justice of the municipal court, concluded the brief speech that formally opened her campaign headquarters down in the lower West Side, that section of Manhattan that is known to the rounders as Little Italy, where clothes lines, laden with vari-colored garments, and swarms of children present a peculiar horizon for the uninitiated.

Truly the new order, the twentieth century order, is under way in Little Italy.

Miss Rembaugh's campaign headquarters are established at the parlor room that was once Spillane's saloon in the heart of the district where "Battery" Dan used to dispense justice for the old First ward, the rendezvous of the "Hudson Dusters," one of the most notorious gangs of terrorists in the days of the old order.

But if the ward heelers who used to pass around hard-sakes, stogies and ponies of "redeye" could creep back and take a look at the place they devotedly called "Spillane's" they would be scunned.

The alcohol-stained bar is still there, and a few of the tables have survived the invasion. But the pretty samovar has replaced the nickeled stand that held cloves, coffee beans and other things calculated to camouflage the odor of whisky and "suds." Flowered cups of thin china replace where shining glasses once were masters of all they surveyed. Clean, pink curtains cover the stained glass windows, and the tables are made almost attractive by crinkly pink paper covers, from which stare kittens with arched backs, and witches.

Teapots steamed at either end of the "bar," while dishes of bonbons and cake and ginger snaps (the strongest thing in stock) were scattered here and there. Women rested their feet on the brass rail, sipped their tea and ate of the sweets in the place where their husbands had once gathered to talk politics over the "ole scuttle o' suds."

Children swarmed around the swinging doors that were once objects of terror to them and called in loud voices for ginger snaps or candy. Now and then one of the women would step out and distribute cations of silencers.

"Tim," the cop, who had worked the First ward in the days of "Battery" Dan, stepped at the corner, glanced at the pink curtains hanging in the windows of the saloon, swung his club once and yawned:

"Gawd, but business is slow!"

WE DON'T KNOW THE CONSTITUTION—DIGGS

Speaker at Y. M. C. A. Forum Declares Americans Unfamiliar With Documents.

"We as Americans do not know our constitution," said Judge James H. Diggs at the meeting of the men's forum at the Y. M. C. A. Sunday afternoon.

"It is seldom consulted except when someone wants to put across some unworthy measure," he said. "Then a loophole to sustain non-enforcement of law is sometimes found by a court and the law is declared unconstitutional."

The address was a forceful plea for adherance to the ideals our forefathers had in mind when the government and constitution was founded. Incidentally the speaker paid a tribute to Colonel Roosevelt, stating that courage, fidelity and service were prime factors in his life and that these attributes should be characteristic of every true American.

A fair sized audience was present at the meeting. This was the first of a series of talks on subjects pertaining to citizenship and other topics of general interest which will be given during the winter. The Rev. Meade Dutt, pastor of the First Christian church, will be the speaker for next Sunday.

Following the forum meeting a social hour was held in the lobby at which an interesting program was given. Miss Mary Belle Latimer sang a soprano solo which was followed by a reading by Miss Margaret Wagner. Mrs. C. E. Buchner and Professor Adolph Kramer played a violin duet, accompanied by Miss Mildred Jones.

FARMERS HOLDING NEARLY HALF OF 1919 WHEAT CROP

Special to The World.

OKLAHOMA CITY, Nov. 2.—The state board of agriculture, in a recent report, estimated that 42.7 per cent, or 21,939,000 bushels of Oklahoma's wheat crop is still in the hands of farmers. The largest percentage on hand, according to the board's estimate from reports of field agents, is found in the extreme northwestern, western and southwestern counties.

The crop already threshed sustained a loss of 2.5 per cent because of insufficient protection from weather. This loss, amounting to approximately 1,250,000 bushels, was due to exposure of the crop both in the shock and after threshing. Farmers who stacked their wheat experienced only slight losses.

Only 3.9 per cent of the state's wheat remains to be threshed.

The board further estimates that there will be a reduction of 27.6 per cent in the acreage planted to wheat this fall, compared with the acreage planted in the fall of 1918. This estimate is subject to change, according to future weather conditions, as planting is still under way.

WAITERS WANT MORE PAY FOR SERVING NOTABLES

ST. LOUIS, Nov. 2.—Hereafter when notables visit St. Louis waiters will charge hostelries at which the guests are entertained a particular wage for serving them. This is stipulated in a new wage scale drawn up by the local waiters' union, which states that on such occasions the waiters shall be paid $7 for six hours work.

The scale demands a 75 per cent salary increase, and carries a "holiday" clause, which also demands $7 for six hours on New Year's eve, Victory day, Labor day, the Fourth of July, and Veiled Prophet's night, an annual local social event.

The present scale is $10 a week. Several restaurants have promised to accept the new scale, it was said.

THE BUSINESS MAN'S DEPARTMENT STORE

Going to Berlin This Winter? Well It's Thankless Mission

COBLENZ, Germany, Nov. 1.—A trip to Berlin at the present stage of war-or-peace bears not the slightest resemblance to a joyride. Here is a veracious recital of the experience of one newspaper man whose business carried him to the German metropolis and back, via the zone of the American army of occupation.

"Want to go to Berlin, do you?" queries Col. P. H. Bagby, chief of intelligence of the American A. of C. "So they told you around General Pershing's place that you could go through here did they? Well, that's not at all certain."

There is little more of that. You convince Bagby that you are not going to Berlin to view German scenery and he passes you on to Lieutenant Switzer, pass control officer, who must have documentary evidence of these facts.

Switzer having been convinced you receive a request from the American military authorities on the German mission here in Cobienz for an "Ersatz-Reisepass," a substitute for a passport issued to Americans entering unoccupied Germany. The Germans are all out at lunch, you return, wait three hours, get your Reisepass and go back to Switzer to get the final American O. K.

"Don't forget when you change trains at Cologne to go to the British and get their stamp," says Switzer.

You remember, all right, but when you arrive in Cologne that evening intending to catch the 10.16 train for Berlin, the American R. T. O. gives you this spasm:

"The British close up shop at 6 p. m., so you'll have to wait until tomorrow unless you want to try to climb on the train without their stamp."

You try, but two stalwart British military cops wave you back gently and direct you to the billeting bureau across from the station, where if you are lucky you may be given a place to sleep.

"There's just one room left," says the billeting officer. "Town's tearfully crowded. This room is in a private apartment long ways off, but you must try that or sleep in the station."

No taxicabs, no carriages—nothing but a strong-armed boy, who leads the way with the bags and brings up after a mile and a half through the rain before an ancient building towering above a corner saloon. No lights in the hallway, also, but by using matches you find your way up four long flights of stairways to the flat of Madame Simon, a kind-faced old German woman alleged to be the possessor of a billet for the night.

Now either Madame Simon has bunked the billeting officer or the billeting officer has bunked you.

"I haven't any bed," says Madame, "but I have a nice cane chaise lounge, that one of my sons used to sleep on and he said it wasn't so bad."

You take it, and the other son, who was a German captain, comes in and you talk about the war in French, and being of the infantry he tells you that while they're trying the kaiser they ought to take all the aviators, particularly bombers, on both sides, and hang them.

The next train leaves for Berlin at 12:[illegible] the next afternoon. The waiter is so long bringing you your luncheon bill that you haven't time to get that confounded British stamp, but you swing on to the train this time unobserved by the British military policeman, only to be brought up by the British pass control 40 minutes later, near Dusseldorf.

"Well, you should have had that stamped, you really should, you know," says the earnest young British officer. "But since you are an American I will let you by."

Dinner on the train, not a bad soup but a very bad fish and some meat that certainly came from an overworked plow horse and could not be eaten as a mere physical feat, not to take into consideration the state of your mind at approaching horse flesh, and then Berlin at 2.30 in the morning.

A giant blond cabman rolls you through deserted, dark streets to the Hotel Adlon in search of a room, meantime throwing a running soliloquy on social and political conditions over his shoulder.

"Catarrh of Stomach Corrected by Internal Baths"

Mrs. John F. Preble of 6151 South Lincoln street, Chicago, Ill., writes to the Tyrrell Hygienic Institute:

The "J. B. L. Cascade" cleanses the lower intestine its entire length and keeps it always free of poisonous waste.

Thousands testify that Constipation, Indigestion, Stomach Troubles, Biliousness, Headaches and all the many serious troubles which they cause are absolutely relieved, and prevented by this Nature Treatment.
