CASCO, SHIP OF FAME, NOW HULK

Schooner That Carried Stevenson on Voyage to Tropic Wreck.

IS LOST IN ARCTIC

Davy Jones' Locker Future Home of Famous Ship of Adventure.

By JOHN A. JARMUTH.

SEATTLE, Wash., Dec. 14. — Pounding against the rocky cliff of a small island in the frigid Arctic sea, the schooner Casco is breaking up today.

In this one statement of fact is written the last chapter of a story of the most far-famed schooner that ever sailed the seas. Plowing on until the sixteenth minute of an eleventh hour, the Casco, the ship that carried Robert Louis Stevenson, author of "Treasure Island," on his memorable voyage into the tropics, is about to meet the fate of everything that harkens to the call of the roaring waves.

From a trim little yacht the Casco became in turn a blockaded runner in the South seas, the scene of the house of Stevenson and he inspiration of many of his writings and finally the hull that carried modern treasure seekers to an imaginary Eldorado.

Back in 1885 Robert Louis Stevenson recorded, delightfully, that the crew of the Casco consisted of "three Swedes and the inevitable Finn."

In June last the Casco sailed out through the Golden Gate of San Francisco bay and headed for the Arctic ocean. Aboard her modern Argonauts set forth on a venture that pales into insignificance the cruise of the ancient Grecian ship. British, Swedes, Scotsmen, Germans and Norwegians were enlisted in her personnel. Only the "inevitable Finn" was lacking.

On the tale of an old salt they had set sail. He had whispered to a few and these few had carried his story of a wreck years ago on the remote shores of Arctic Siberia, near the Kolyma river, 1,000 miles west of East Cape, at the entrance to Bering Straits. That wreck had left on the shores of the Arctic great wealth in gold dust, the property of hardy sailors who had "panned" and "sluiced" the river beds of the shore line.

Captain C. L. Oliver of San Francisco, was the modern Jason, and Mate Eric Smith his right-hand man. Each and every one of the crew was a part owner in the vessel. The cook, the galley boy, the seamen, the 'bos'n—all had contributed what they could to purchase and outfit the Casco for what developed into its final dash.

The little vessel fought her way to North Cape, the farthest north of any vessel in the world during last season. Ice prevented her sailing up the Kolyma river. Nine members of the expedition were left at North Cape and three were put ashore to prospect for gold.

She proceeded then for Bering Straits, in a great race with the ice, but on September 8, struck the rocks of King Island. On the night of the tenth, she began to leak so badly that it was seen her doom had been sealed. Mate Smith and those aboard succeeded in saving their stores and, in open boats, made shore. There they lived in a deserted Esquimaux village. Captain Oliver had been knocked overboard while trying to save the vessel, and developed pneumonia. Today he is in a hospital at Port Townsend, recuperating.

After two weeks on the island Mate Smith and five men set out for Nome, a distance of 80 miles, in a tiny native skin-boat. Through a snow squall they paddled the little canoe for 32 hours. The greater part of the time the skin-boat was half filled with water and incessant bailing alone kept it afloat.

The coast guard cutter Bear hastened to the rescue of those left on the island and brought them to Nome, where all took a steamer for "the outside."

Perhaps the strangest thing about these hardy mariners today is the fact that they are impatient to start again and are preparing now to outfit another vessel for the expedition.

Here is the story of the Casco's other "Six Ages:"

First she was the yacht of Doctor Merrill of San Francisco, and in those early days was considered a "palatial" craft.

Then Robert Louis Stevenson purchased her and set sail for the South seas, seeking health and rest from an arduous life. Often Stevenson, Kamehameha, the king of Hawaii, and other notables, gathered on her decks to while away the time spinning yarns of the South sea traders.

Her third stage of life was spent fr several years as a sealer, riding out the storms of the north Pacific.

In her fourth stage she slipped over the horizon of the blue Pacific into a pall of mystery. Dark stories followed her name down the coast lines of Hawaii. She was loaded with opium and always—inevitably—the revenue officers were in hot pursuit. Never, though, was she caught in this act of "running."

Fifth, a dull prosaic chapter was written into her record when she acted as a general trader.

Sixth, a nautical school ship in Vancouver, B. C., groaning, perhaps, under the restraint thus imposed upon her, when mere schoolboys trod her decks and pulled at her ropes so they might learn the manly business of an A. B.

The Pacific will pause and remember the daughter little Casco." The literary world of England and America will comment on the wreck of Robert Louis Stevenson's "great little boat."

And who knows but the ghost of Squire Trelawney perhaps sits upon the rocky cliff of King Island and mourns the passing of a "real ship."

VETERANS ON THE RHINE

Majority of Soldiers in 5th and 50th Served With Combat Units.

WITH THE AMERICAN FORCES IN GERMANY, Dec. 14.—Quite a number of regular officers who marched to the Rhine with the American army of occupation in December, 1918, and who have been to the United States and discharged and enlisted again go to make up the Fifth and Fifteenth regiments which arrived recently in the vicinity of Coblenz to await possible dispatch in the near future to Upper Silesia to supervise the plebiscite. A large percentage of those soldiers are from the First, Second and Third divisions, some of them saw 18 and 12 months service in France and Belgium before the armistice.
