WANT BUSINESS MAN NEXT YEAR

Price of Living to Be Live Issue in Coming Battle.

MUST ABOLISH WASTE

Both Parties Get Word on What People Are Demanding.

By WILLIAM PHILIP SIMS

WASHINGTON, Dec. 22.—A business man for president and the price of bread and meat as one great issue of the 1920 campaign, political long heads of both parties here today admit will be the winning combination during the coming struggle.

Speaking in seasonable parable, they declare, democrats and republicans alike, that the wise men of the east—or west—who would reach the white house and its environments next fall must early and plainly write across their political Star of Bethlehem the motto: "A wasteless administration and cheaper living for all."

Party leaders at national headquarters here do not try to conceal that this is the unmistakeable sign of the times, the handwriting on the wall.

Every issue thus far suggested by either one of the great parties, when stripped of verbiage and ringing phrases, will prove to be but a variation of that one, all-absorbing, if homely, theme, cost of living and how to meet it.

Scouts belonging to both sides have reported back to headquarters, after a swing around the country investigating conditions, that the great mass of Americans is interested in one thing to the exclusion almost of all others and that is "getting living conditions back to normal."

Basing their conclusions on what they have seen, heard and had reported to them, politicians here agree that whatever draperies either side may choose to wrap around its platform next year, the rough framework of that platform inevitably must be a formal pledge of relief from high prices. Privately, republicans concede that actual conditions are due primarily to the war, but they declare a reaction from huge expenditures is setting in and—here the democrats (likewise privately) agree with them—the entire country is yearning for "the good old days" and the candidate who can convince voters that he is the one who can bring them back quicker and more completely than any other, might as well begin selecting his cabinet now.

OIL MAN DIES OF INJURIES.

John E. Webb of Houton, Prominent in Humble Field, Succumbs.

HOUSTON, Texas, Dec. 22.—John E. Webb, one of the most widely known oil operators in the Humble field, died Monday night at a local hospital as the result of injuries received when struck by a crown block from an oil well in the field. He has been in the oil business in Houston for the last 20 years and was interested in 18 wells in this field.

Get Carranza's Photo.

SAN ANTONIO, Texas, Dec. 22.—President Carranza of Mexico will present each officer and enlisted man in the Mexican federal army with one of his photographs as a Christmas present. Mexico City newspapers say that 100,000 of the chief executive's pictures have been printed for the soldiers.

Keep Kettle Boiling.

Disproving the saying, "A watched pot never boils," the kettles watched over on the city streets by Salvation army workers, are being "kept boiling" by passersby who want the other fellow to have a real Christmas dinner with all the trimmings. In order to bring more contributions for the Salvation army fund, members of the musicians union will form themselves into a band Wednesday and play near the kettles.
