Margaret Murphy McCullom Heard From

The following is received from Mrs. Margaret Murphy McCullom, formerly assistant oil editor of The Tulsa World, and while it is a bit personal it is of absorbing interest, as both Margaret Murphy and her husband are in a way public property here in Tulsa. In other words, if it were withheld it would be doing our readers a great injustice, as it was here that this match was made and not in heaven, and both are greatly beloved in Tulsa. It will be our loss, but the country's gain, that Margaret McCullom is going into literature, because we had fondly hoped that she would return and take up her work again as a special writer and contribute to the oil page of this paper. But her work will doubtless take her into realms of good literature, and that she will succeed and will become one of the greatest writers of the day and time is recognized by every one in Tulsa who has ever known her or followed her writings on this page. There is a job open for her at any time, and she will find her collaborator, Miss Businger, a mighty good assistant, and should this very brilliant couple decide to make Tulsa their home they will receive a warm welcome here.

We will have McCullom with us at frequent intervals, and here's hoping they may decide to make Tulsa their abiding place. This is especially true because recently it has been developed that there are many new fields in Oklahoma where the rotary drilling machine could be used to mighty good advantage, and it takes Mac to get them installed and properly tried out.

Dear Colonel: Mac and I have been thinking for a few very, very happy moments that we were coming back to Tulsa to live. I might say they were wildly happy moments because, Colonel Peck (to quote Mac, whom I quote, as a dutiful wife should, on all occasions) because although we have seen the glory that was Greece and the splendor that was Rome, to say nothing of the fog that is London and the graft that is Paris, and the beauties that are Roumania. (No, Mac, I am not talking about the women) and the charms that are Constantinople; and seen the sun rise on the Swiss Alps and set behind Vesuvius in the Bay of Naples, and although we've marked the exact spot where Leander swam the Hellespont and where Dido stood and willed her soul to come again to Athens, and although we've frolicked on Broadway and waxed intellectual in Boston, and we've crossed and tossed on more than seven seas since we left you last—still, as I started to say some time ago, we haven't found another place where a man will lend his worst enemy his best tool to complete his nearest hole. No, it's only Tulsa that it can be done. So,

"As the weary long for home,
We are weary for the sight of it,
The curve of it, the swerve of it,
The sunny, dappled light of it."

But—woe is us, and also whoa! For those who are far wiser than we have willed us to be domiciled for a time at least in St. Louis. Mac has made a new connection with the Continental Supply company as assistant to the general manager, and his principal duties will be sort of liaison-officer-like between that company's various stores between the Mississippi and the California fields. In the words of the classics (Mac's classics) he will be a travelin' fool for a time at least, and so I am seizing upon this, a long-cherished opportunity, to take some fiction courses at Columbia university here in New York, after which—who knows—I may engage myself to some of these New York "oil companies" who float their stock among ones adequately described by O. Henry as the "Hicks of Broadway." I know of no place where a Carlie use of fiction would be of more service.

I have recently had an operation on my nose, and the other day while Mac and I were in the doctor's office he opened his mail: six letters in all—and three of them were from oil stock companies. He said that this was a fair daily average. The papers are full of their advertisements these "oil companies," all the way from three line readers to full page announcements. I am enclosing one for your benefit. You will notice that it is marked "attractive" and I thought you might be instructed thereby.

The enclosed clipping about Mr. Sinclair I saw in the "Conning Tower," the humorous column of the New York Tribune. You know of course that it is the last word in fame for a layman to get his name in the funny column. So it would appear that Mr. S. is one of 'em here.

I forgot to tell you, Colonel Peck, that Mac and I had come home from Roumania and that we came because we considered the Roumanians a bad bunch of birds whose government is seeking to monopolize the oil industry, whose oil, the normal value of which is 21 cents, is now worth 2 cents and still dropping, whose railroads are so congested with loot from Hungary that it is now impossible to move freight (which includes oil) backward or forward, with the sad consequence that while the oil fields of Ploesti are shut down because the storage is full the minister of the interior sits shivering in his icy office 60 kilometers away because the oil can't be got to him.

But then I suppose it was ever thus in the Balkans. They are fearful and wonderful, those Balkan peoples, and not the least fearful and wonderful of the things they did was the way they made off with the Hoover and Red Cross supplies—nor the least wonderful the prices we paid for them when we bought these American-donated-to-the-starving goods out of the stores. The last purchase we made in Roumania was when our boat, after a day's trip up the Danube to the mouth of the Black sea, stopped a day at Constanza—the principal Black sea port, and here we bought eight cans of jam plainly marked "American Red Cross," and although the shopkeeper knew we were Americans he didn't even blush when he handed us the jam. If Hoover couldn't exercise more restraint over the Roumanians I'm afraid I've none too much confidence in his being able to hold down the British. As Mac says, "We ha' our doots," and as we both agree, the less one knows about those he must "internationalize" with the better. So "internationalize."

I'm afraid that the Europeans are all waiting for the raven—or an international ornithologist might correct me and say it was the eagle—to come and drop manna into their open hands, and until they come out of this trance about a lifelong subsidy from the American nation it looks as if business would be poor. Anyway, we're glad we're back.

Mac says to tell you he brought some sweeks, which is the distillate of prunes (and it was 18 years old) and part of it had your name on it. But it was the day before Christmas and I suppose the dock officials needed the stuff to celebrate with. At any rate, they nabbed it, and no amount of urging from us could budge their obdurate wills. Said they were making things just as disagreeable as possible, so that the people of the country would become disgusted and sign a repeal of the liquor laws.

Mac will be in Tulsa within the next six weeks, I imagine, and I will see you some time in the not too, too far distant future. With love and best wishes for the year, I am, always, your friend sincerely.

MARAGARET M. MCCULLOM

Gilliland Absorbs Foster Interests

It was announced by P. J. Hurley, vice president of the Gilliland Oil company at Tulsa, that a deal had been consummated whereby the J. H. Foster interests in the state of Louisiana have been merged in the Gilliland Oil company.

This merger is the outcome of the entrance of Gilliland and Foster into the Louisiana field last summer when they acquired extensive holdings and have, from time to time, since then, made additional purchases, which have resulted in the grouping of properties aggregating some 3,000 acres, about 600 acres of which are now producing or proven, on which they have drilled a large number of wells and have, at this time, a daily production in excess of 25,000 barrels, which is being sold and moved from the field or placed in steel storage tanks on the farms owned by them.

The producing properties are located in both the Bull Bayou and the Homer fields and in each instance the properties are in the heart of the pool.

The transaction also includes oil now in storage, amounting to approximately 600,000 barrels and steel tankage in course of construction with a capacity of 3,000,000 barrels, together with pipe lines, loading racks and all general equipment.

It is understood that the transaction does not involve a new stock issue.

The acquisition of this property by the Gilliland Oil company, together with its production in Kansas, Oklahoma and Texas, gives it probably the largest production of high grade oil of any independent oil company operating in the southwest.

Mr. Foster becomes a director and vice president of the Gilliland Oil company. His experience and ability as an oil operator adds greatly to the efficiency and strength of the organization.

This is one of the largest and most far reaching oil transactions that has occurred recently. The combination of these properties with the known ability of Gilliland and Foster as oil operators, evidenced by their remarkable success places the Gilliland Oil company as one of the strongest producing oil companies in the southwest and opens the way for unlimited operations.

Petroleum Club Meeting Tonight

There will be a meeting of the Petroleum club tonight which will be of the greatest importance as regards the future growth of Tulsa and the welfare of the oil men, as it will be the first move toward building a new club house, which is so badly needed. All members should make it a point to be represented at tonight's meeting and whatever is done will always be mentioned as the important and outstanding feature of the development of Tulsa as the oil center.

With the Oil Men

George Foster of the Devonian Oil company, who has been suffering with the influenza, is up again and is likely to be out today if the weather conditions are good.

George E. Benton has resigned as resident geologist for the Empire Gas & Fuel Co. and has joined the geological staff of the East Butte Copper Mining company, with offices at 1216 Colcord Bldg., Oklahoma City.

C. J. O'Neill, publicity director of the chamber of commerce of Okmulgee, is in the city.

Mr. Berryan Series of Series & Co., Chicago, is in the city meeting a party of oil investors from New York and Philadelphia, looking over the properties of the Tryale Oil company. The company has one of the best gas leases in Okmulgee county, being section 10-14-11, four big gas wells, one of them making 3,000,000 feet, thirty-two drilling wells hooked on to two wells. Mr. Series is also looking over properties of two other well known companies whom they are financing. Mr. Series, it will be remembered, organized one of the largest oil companies in Okmulgee.

John J. O'Leary of Passaic, N. J., has been visiting his cousin, M. J. Flahie and family, for the last few days. Mr. O'Leary assisted in putting through the first trunk oil line from the Pennsylvania field to the refineries in New Jersey for the Standard Oil company and was in charge of the eastern end of the lines for years. He is now the president of a large construction company, which bears his name, in New York City and employs 500 men. Mr. O'Leary is prospering and has the appearance of a man that would put through anything he undertakes.
