AN AFFLICTED PARENT.
A SECOND JOB.

"Darby Dodd," a regular correspondent of the New York Metropolitan Record, in his quality way, gets off more than semi-occasionally, most telling hits upon the follies and shortcomings of this degenerate age. The following is one of his last efforts: WASHINGTON, Jan. 25, 1868.

Editor Portfolio.—While I was sitting in the reading room of Willard's, this afternoon, thinking over a plan to save the country and protect Mr. Stanton from the persecution of unscrupulous enemies, a white-haired old gentleman came up to me, and said he understood I was a person of sympathetic nature. The first idea occurred to me was that he wanted me to get him an appointment; but the utter misery that was stamped on his face soon removed this unworthy thought, and filled me with deep pity.

I informed him that some one had told him the truth, which is a very remarkable thing in Washington, and he then said he had a tale to tell that would probably harrow up my soul.

"What is it about, my venerable friend?" said I to the old gentleman; and he answered briefly but sorrowfully:

"It is a tale of family disgrace." "Pray, sir," I said, "don't pain yourself by repeating family troubles to me; I am at present engaged in considering more important matters. The very life of the nation, sir, is in danger, and I am considering how to save it."

But the old gentleman would not be put off. He insisted on unfolding his tale, and taking his seat beside me he began as follows:

"I am the father of ten children." I expressed my condolence, and he continued:

"Ten children, sir, and I did all I could to bring them up in the way of virtue and honor."

"And I trust they are a comfort and support to you in your old age," said I. "Ah, sir, they have been a curse to me. Look at these grey hairs! Look at the furrows of care upon my face! My children, oh, my children!"

I became interested, and told the old gentleman to proceed.

"My first great grief," said he, composing himself, "was caused by my eldest son. He was a young man of fine promise, and I had him educated for the Church. He became a minister. His sermons were the wonder of our section. He married an excellent girl and lived happily with her. His Christian zeal knew no bounds. He established a Sabbath school, and started the greatest revival movement ever known in the West. It gladdened my heart to see my son devoting himself so earnestly to holy work. But a blow came, a terrible blow. In the midst of the revival he eloped with one of the Sabbath school teachers and left his wife and children on my hands."

I said that it was a great blow, indeed, and the old gentleman went on:

"About this time my second son, a young man of excellent talents and character, held a responsible position in a bank in New York. I was proud of him, sir, and I looked forward to the time when he would be one of the foremost bankers in the metropolis. But there was another blow coming. One day I received a letter from the President of the bank informing me that my son was a defaulter, that he had embezzled $200,000 and started for Europe with a waiter girl from one of the concert saloons."

"That was dreadful," said I. "Yes, sir, it was a great disgrace, but not the worst. Another son settled in Chicago and became a gambler. He associated with the most disreputable persons, pugilists, blacklegs, thieves, and went down step by step until he finally connected himself with a gift enterprise for the relief of soldiers and sailors. Oh, how my heart bled when I heard how low he had descended!"

"No wonder, sir, it was fearful." "It was fearful, sir, but I bore it as well as I could. My fourth son was educated for the bar. He was admitted to practice, and soon became a rising man. But the evil star was over him, too. He became a drunkard. He lost all self-respect, but still he had clients. One of them was a widow with six orphans. She retained him in an important property case. It involved a fortune. He assured her he would gain it, and he did. He gained the case, sir, and pocketed every dollar of the money himself. Then he became more and more dissipated, and was at last found dead in a common bar-room in St. Louis."

"Poor man, your sorrows are very great! That blow was shocking." "Oh, it is terrible, sir; but there was worse to come. My second daughter, a beautiful girl, married a young merchant. They seemed to be very happy. Four children blessed their union—lovely children, the image of their parents. Fanny's husband doted on her; he thought she doted upon him. But she deceived him. One evening when he went home she was absent. She did not return that night. He was distracted. Next day one of his clerks was absent. He made inquiries, and learned that they had eloped. When the news came to me it almost broke my heart."

"Shocking, shocking!" I observed; but without heeding my interruption,

"Sarah, my third daughter, was always a foolish girl, full of romantic notions, and fond of reading novels. A month after Fanny's marriage she ran away with a traveling tinker and came back in less than a year in rags. Poor Sarah! I could not blame her more, for she was unsteady; but the disgrace almost killed her mother."

"No wonder, sir; it might well have bowed your head, too." "It did, sir, it did; but I bore it. I had to bear much more. My fourth son joined the army, and as he was good at praying, they made him chaplain. Then he took charge of the mails of his regiment, and looked after the correspondence of the men. But he fell. He was detected opening letters sent to the soldiers and taking money out of them, and the Colonel had him drummed out of camp."

"And you survived that?" "Yes, and much more. These disgrace were terrible; but I could have borne them. The greatest of all was to come. I had another daughter, a giddy young creature, and though I am her father, I may say she was handsome. She was fond of dancing, going to the circus, and all that. One day she was missing, and we searched high and low for her, but she could not be found. One of our neighbors went to New York, and while there he went to see the Black Crook. Oh, sir, it was sad news he brought home. One of the girls he saw on the stage was our Julia. We tried to break the news to her mother, but it was too much for her. She sunk into a fit and died, and I buried her three weeks ago."

"That was the saddest disgrace indeed." "Oh, sir, I wish it had been the greatest is still unfulfilled. My son, Frank, became a pugilist, and is now traveling through the country as a prize fighter, associating with roughs and pick-pockets, and making my old heart writhe with shame whenever I hear his name."

"Your hair may well be gray after that." "Worse than that—far worse. I have not mentioned my eldest daughter. She joined a missionary society and was appointed treasurer. One day she disappeared, and the money in her hands has never been found. The minister of the town she lived in, was missed at the same time, and two months after I heard of them in Cincinnati. I then lost track of them, and did not again hear of Penelope until last week, when I learned that she had joined the Mormons, and was the tenth wife of a scoundrel in Utah."

"Good heavens, sir! how can you bear such shame as all this?" "Shame! ah, sir, these are trifles to the last and greatest shame!"

"The last and greatest? Surely there can be no lower depth of infamy than you have told me of?"

"There is! there is!" said the old man with a horrible groan. "My sixth and youngest son was elected to Congress, and is now sitting in that marble building at the other end of the avenue."

The old man's head fell upon the table, and I left him to weep over this terrible disgrace.

Yours sympathetically,
DARBY DODD.

MR. GOUGH'S RECOVERY.—The following incident is worthy of being often repeated, as an encouragement to labor for moral or religious reform. A warm heart and wise tongue may overcome the most formidable obstacles. Rev. T. L. Cuyler tells the story:

"On a certain Sabbath evening, some twenty years ago, a reckless ill-dressed young man was idly lounging under the elm-tree in the public square of Worcester. He had become a wretched waif on the current of sin. His days were spent in the waking remorse of the drunkard; his nights were passed in the buffoneries of the ale house."

"As he sauntered along, out of humor with himself and with all mankind, a kind voice saluted him. A stranger laid his hand on his shoulder, and said, in cordial tones: 'Mr. G., go down to our meeting at the town-hall to-night.' A brief conversation followed, so winning in its character that the reckless youth consented to go. He went; he heard the appeals there made. With tremulous hand he signed the pledge of total abstinence. By God's help he kept it, and keeps it yet. The poor boot-cripper who tapped him on the shoulder—good Sol Stratton—has lately gone to heaven. But the youth he saved is to-day the foremost reformer on the face of the globe. Methinks, when I listen to the thunders of applause that greet J. B. Gough on the platform of Exeter Hall or the Academy of Music, I am hearing the echoes of that tap on the shoulder, and of that kind invitation under the ancient elms of Worcester! 'He that winneth souls is wise.'"

POTATO PUDDING.—With a pound and a quarter of fine mealy potatoes boiled very dry and mashed perfectly smooth while hot, mix three ounces of butter, five or six of sugar, five eggs, a few grains of salt and the grated rind of a lemon. Pour the mixture into a well-buttered dish and bake in a moderate oven three-quarters of an hour. When done sift some sugar on it.

A LITTLE girl in Bangor, last Sunday, astonished her Sunday-school teacher with "Blessed are the dress-makers,"

AN APOLOGY FOR DRUNKENNESS.

Thereby Showing Its Good and Bad Effects.

Drunkenness has a legal and patriotic tendency; because drunkards pay their debts according to law and furnish abundant employment for lawyers and sheriffs, justices and constables; and they also support the government generously, by paying more excise than any other class of citizens.

Drunkenness promotes liberty and equality; because it disposes the subjects of it to pursue all restraint human and divine; and brings down the proudest gentleman to a perfect level with the greatest ruffian; and renders their company equally agreeable and entertaining, as they are equally disposed to pour out a deluge of nonsense, billings-gate and blasphemy.

Drunkenness promotes legal science; because drunkards obtain an interesting knowledge of criminal jurisprudence, and a number of them study the penal statutes in those legal seminaries, commonly called jails and penitentiaries.

Drunkenness promotes domestic government; for if you follow a drunkard home, you will find him raging and foaming; blaspheming and abusing his patient, industrious and miserable wife and children, who stand before him with fear and trembling, horror and anguish, as silent as the grave and as submissive as the slave chained to the cart.

Drunkenness is subservient to orthodoxy and virtue; because drunkards demonstrate the doctrine of human depravity and degradation by arguments the most convincing and unanswerable; and they display vice in an attitude and dress the most odious and disgusting.

Drunkenness promotes religion in general, and humanity in particular; because some men have no religion until they obtain a stiff grog, and their religion increases in proportion to the quantity of spirits they imbibe, until at length they become so extremely religious and humble, as to wallow in the mud along with the hogs, for the edification of the spectators.

Drunkenness circumscribes the agency of the prince of darkness; because his infernal majesty, from long experience, has so much confidence in drunkards that they will directly, or indirectly, render their families as miserable as possible, that he seldom interferes in the business. And whenever a drunkard appears in any company, the demon on duty puts on his hat and leaves the room, as his presence is no longer necessary.

Finally, drunkenness prevents testamentary obligations and funeral mourning; because drunkards generally live their own heirs and die their own executors, and leave the world with the consent of their friends and neighbors.

Done in behalf of the thirsty, by their attorney in fact.

THE NEED OF A FREEDMEN'S BUREAU.—We give the following article from the Richmond Enquirer as illustrating the need of a Freedmen's Bureau in the South. The incident is, we suppose, one of ten thousand similar ones, of daily occurrence in that section:

A gentleman from one of the neighboring counties, who desired to obtain a number of able-bodied negro laborers for his plantation, visited Richmond to procure them, having learned that there were hundreds of unemployed blacks loafing idle about the city.—The morning after his arrival he was directed to one of the localities where large quantities of bread and soup are daily distributed by the Freedmen's Bureau. He found a ragged, hungry horde of nearly five hundred persons, assembled to receive the usual supplies of food. To his astonishment, the applicants for soup and bread were not all women and children. He counted one hundred and eight able-bodied negro men, capable of performing every variety of farm labor. There they were with every conceivable variety of vessel, waiting hours to be fed by the Bureau. To many of these hulking idlers he offered the highest wages paid to agricultural laborers, and abundant rations of good, wholesome food. But they all refused to enter his service, alleging any other reason, that they were fed by the Bureau, and did not wish by leaving Richmond to forfeit their right to vote.

LEAP YEAR.—The year 1868 is Leap Year, as possibly some of our readers have already discovered. This is the year of great privilege to the girls, bless them; a year of Jubilee, to all those poor, pining creatures whose very souls have gone out in love, for years past, after some "great hateful man," and all to no purpose. Now, girls, is your chance; this is the day of your deliverance, or at least it may be within the present year. Be up and doing—be active and energetic—and don't trifle away the day of grace—don't neglect your blessed privilege. You have the right to "pop the question" to any male biped you please, and he won't dare say nay. Then we say, crack it to them. Confound their tardy skins, if they won't propose while they have the right to do so, you teach them a lesson that will be a warning for all time to come.

—The New Orleans Picayune thinks there will be comparatively little cotton planted this year in Louisiana.

A STRANGE CASE.—The New York Tribune says:

That justice follows strange courses sometimes we have a remarkable proof in the sequel to a criminal trial which lately created a great deal of excitement in England. Our readers may remember the case of a man named Watkins, who, having a quarrel with his sweetheart, stabbed her in thirteen places, and left her for dead in the fields. She lay all night in the open air, but finally recovered, and when the fellow's trial was about coming off, she forfeited her recognizances she had given as a witness and left the country in the hope that through her absence he might get off. It is satisfaction to know, however, that he was sentenced to twenty years' penal servitude. Now the poor girl comes back, in arrested for the amount of her bond, which neither she nor her father has any means to pay, the other day she applied to the bankruptcy court for relief. If she had been a reckless trades woman who had squandered the property of her creditors she might have got a discharge; but being only an unfortunate girl who loved the man that tried to murder her better than herself, she was remanded to jail; the Bankrupt Act could not help her. Surely the enforcing of this debt to the crown is straining the law to the point of injustice. There are cases in which the law ought to wink at its own violation.

ARTLESS SIMPLICITY.—One of the sweetest incidents which we have noticed for many a day—and one which shows the effect of early training, assisted by a pure and undefiled imagination. It is thus related: A lady visited New York city and saw on the sidewalk a ragged, cold and hungry little girl, gazing wistfully at some of the cakes in a show window. She stopped, and taking the little one by the hand, led her into the store. Though she was aware that bread might be better for the cold child than cake, yet desiring to gratify the shivering and forlorn one, she bought and gave her the cakes she wanted. She then took her to another place, where she procured her a shawl and other articles of comfort. The grateful little creature looked the benevolent lady full in the face, and with artless simplicity, said, "Are you God's wife?" Did the most eloquent speaker ever employ words to a better advantage?

JUDGE GRIFFITH, on the bench in New York, appointed a crier whose want of sense was more than made up by the size of his voice. A young barrister, with more fun than legal lore in him, so one day the judge ordered the crier, to call Jabez Logue. The barrister, stepping behind the crier, whispered, "Epi-logue," in his ear.

"Epi-logue!" shouted the crier.

"Mono-logue!" said the lawyer.

"Mono-logue!" cried the crier.

"Pro-logue!"

And the crier still cried, "Pro-logue!"

"Dia-logue!" at the top of his voice.

"Dia-logue!" at hearing no response Discouraged, the crier turned from the Logue, sitting in mute and said to the crier, "I have called at the Logue, as in town, and never one is here to speak."

IMPORTANT ADDITIONAL BOUNTY BILL.—The following is the additional bounty bill which has just been passed by both houses, and which now goes to the President:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That if any person or persons entitled to the bounty provided by sections 12 and 13 of the act making appropriations for the civil service approved July 28, 1868, shall have died, or shall die before receiving said bounty, it shall be paid to the heirs of the soldier, as designated in said act, in the order therein named, and to none other.

In a town in Maine lived a man who, though yet in middle age, had put on the mourning for three wives. In the course of time a fourth was brought home, and in the course of her clearing up and putting things to rights she found in the attic a long piece of old board, and was about launching it out of the window, when little Sallie interposed and said:—Oh don't mamma! that is the board papa lays out his wives on, and he wants to save it! Nevertheless, it went.

If sheep are in a poor condition now, they must be gradually brought up; feed on in the sheaf, a few daily, and some roots and good hay. Let all have the range of dry yards or fields, and warm sheds well ventilated.

SHORT AND SWEET.—"I can't speak in public; never done such a thing in all my life," said a chap the other night at a public meeting, who had been called upon to hold forth; "But if any body will speak for me, I'll hold his hat!"

A CERTAIN fop who was arguing with Diogenes on the immortality of the soul, asked him, "Now, where do you think I shall go after death?" "Wherever your tailor goes," was the reply.

A GENTLEMAN.—At a musical party asked a friend, in a whisper, "How shall I stir the fire without interrupting the music?" "Between the bars," replied the friend.

A Northern man attending an auction sale in Georgia thoughtlessly bid $51 for one hundred and ninety acres of land, and it was knocked down to him. He wants to sell it now.

The fruit growers throughout Indiana report that thus far not one peach bud in a hundred has been injured by frost.
